WOMEN HURT IN CRASH OF CAR AND AUTO

MISHAP AT CROSS STREET

Four Cars With Picnickers Pass in Arlington; Fifth Is Hit.

CATHERINE WHILTON of Davis street, Arlington, sustained a broken collar bone and fractured arm, a Miss Julia Maynard of No. 259 Mystic street, Arlington, a broken arm, and Mr. and Mrs. Francis J. Whilton and a man named C. F. Fairbanks, who lived in Boston, suffered slight injuries in a collision of an automobile in which they were riding and an electric car of the Bay State Street Railway Company on Mystic street, Arlington, at 7:45 o'clock last night.

Five trolley cars containing children returning from a Sunday school picnic at Silver Lake, Wilmington, were proceeding along Mystic street. Four of the cars had crossed Davis street. Just as the fifth was crossing, the automobile, which is owned by John Whilton, darted out of Davis street and collided with the trolley car.

Both car and automobile were going slowly. The injured were attended by Drs. Webber and Dennett, after which they were removed to their homes.

A dozen passengers, several of them women, jumped from an Elevated car on Washington street, Dorchester, late last night, when an oil can exploded and sent the flaming oil over the floor of the car. An alarm of fire was rung from box 992, and by the time the firemen arrived the blaze had damaged the car to the extent of $100. According to the story told the police, two men got on the car, one bearing an oil can. When the car was nearing Codman square, on its way to the Ashmont carbarns the oil ignited. The police claim a match was spilled by somebody. There was a flash, followed by a cloud of smoke. Passengers became excited at the explosion. The car had stopped, and many leaped to the ground.

One woman fainted and a score of other passengers were shaken last night in a collision between a Norfolk street car and an automobile truck on Warren street, near Townsend street, Roxbury. Catherine Flagg, forty-two years old, living on Herbert street, Dorchester, was taken to her home suffering from shock. The woman fainted.

William Barrett of No. 12 Withington street, Dorchester, who was driving the car, did his utmost to avoid the child and quickly came to a stop. He jumped from his auto, picked up the child and putting her in the auto rushed to the office of Dr. Thomas Giblin.

Two Fire Chiefs Hold Down One Revere Job

One of 'em' Fired, Sticks; Other, Hired, Goes to Work; Town Now Wonders Which Is the Boss.

With two fire chiefs at the central fire station, Revere last night speculated on who was who in the fire department. The firelisters wondered whose orders they should obey.

The two chiefs are Arthur L. Kimball, chief for the last ten years, and Philip G. Golliff, former deputy chief, who was promoted by the same board of engineers that discharged Kimball. Both men were on duty last night.

Yesterday "Chief" Kimball was ordered by three selectmen of the town to stick to his job.

Yesterday "Chief" Golliff was ordered by four members of the board of Engineers to stick to HIS job.

Last night Kimball said he was going to stick until the Selectmen called him off.

Last night Golliff said HE was going to stick until the engineers called HIM off.

Meantime, nobody could tell which chief was authorized to ride in the town's new $850 fire automobile. Meantime, also, Selectman Casassa issued a call for an indignation meeting in the Town Hall Tuesday night to uphold Kimball and denounce the engineers. The rumor spread that the Selectmen, at their meeting on Wednesday night, voted to drop the engineers and Golliff and keep Kimball.

Special Cable to the Boston American.
By H. H. STANSBURY.

SANTIAGO, Cuba, June 22.—Information from an apparently authentic source indicates the Gomez agents have been successful in their efforts to induce Estoues and his rebel forces to stop the revolution for a financial consideration. The amount involved is said to be $200,000. There have been no active hostilities for the last seventy-two hours, except for desultory firing at El Caney last night by an unorganized force.

The Senate has appropriated $50,000 to aid the reconcentrados to return home. This indicates the government in Havana knows what is happening in the brush.

MEYER HAS TYPHOID.

Secretary's Illness Is Said, However, to Be of Mild Form.

Secretary of the Navy George von L. Meyer, who recently went to his home at Rock Maple Farm, Hamilton, from Washington, is suffering from a mild attack of typhoid fever, it was stated at the home last night. It was announced Friday that all danger of fever had passed. The Secretary of the Navy later developed a slight case of typhoid, it was explained yesterday, as he had been in excellent physical condition, his physician thought there would be no serious result.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

COPYRIGHT BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

ROOSEVELT MAY ASK MITCHELL TO RUN

This is the state former President Roosevelt has submitted to a member of the Pennsylvania delegation to the Republican national convention. That man who is supposed to be close to the former president of the United Mine Workers of America, has been asked to sound the labor leader on the proposal to ascertain if he would consent to run as the nobsless string to the Roosevelt fiddle.

This information was received today in a private message asking for the present address of Mr. Mitchell. Local labor leaders who were questioned are inclined to believe Mr. Mitchell will decline the honor, but up to a late hour this evening it has been impossible to find him.

Mr. Mitchell for many years has been a close friend of former President Roosevelt, and on this friendship Colonel Roosevelt is declared to be presuming to collect something in the neighborhood of a million votes which John Mitchell might bring to the Roosevelt-Mitchell ticket.

PLAN TO FIGHT STRIKE.

PARIS, June 22.—At a ministerial conference today it was decided to attempt to break the French maritime strike with naval reserves unless a settlement is brought about soon. The situation at Marseilles has become acute. Thousands of dollars worth of perishable freight, such as fruit and vegetables, is rotting in the holds of ships.

ROOSEVELT ACCEPTS BOLTERS' NOMINATION

By HUGH S. MILLER.

An hour after Taft had been renominated by the Republican national convention tonight, Theodore Roosevelt was the nominee of the National Progressives, assembled in Orchestra Hall.

A little later he had accepted the nomination and had asked those who assisted in launching the new movement to convene again in six weeks and ratify their indorsement of his candidacy.

"The fight is on," was Roosevelt's answer to the bosses.

Assembled in Orchestra Hall were the delegates who had been instructed to come to the Republican national convention and nominate Roosevelt. With them were the contestants whose cases had been thrown out by the National Committee.

They were determined, enthusiastic, and they were flanked by a great gathering of Roosevelt supporters—a shouting, cheering, singing, screaming, defiant crowd that could say but one thing: "We want Teddy."

It was a simple ceremony, but most significant when viewed in its relation to the country's affairs. A resolution was passed nominating Roosevelt. He spoke in reply, accepting it.

The proceeding was marked by wild enthusiasm.

Governor Hadley of Missouri, Governor Deneen of Illinois, Governor Stubbs of Kansas, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho and Senator Bristow of Kansas were conspicuous by their absence.

The people in the hall, men and women alike, felt they were able to make the fight themselves, and they were content. And when the nominating resolution had passed and Colonel Roosevelt had taken the platform it seemed as if human strength and human voices could do no more, no more.

FOR PRESIDENT

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Sherman 597; Borah 21; Merriam 20; Hadley 14; Beveridge 2; Gillette 1; Absent 71; Not Voting 352.

COLISEUM, Chicago, June 22.—At 9.25 tonight William Howard Taft was nominated for the second time for President of the United States. The nomination came after a roll-call in which the bitterness of the convention was reflected. Clash after clash resulted. Roll-calls were challenged. One hour later James S. Sherman was re-nominated for Vice-President, after the nomination had been turned down by Hadley, of Missouri, Deneen of Illinois and Borah of Idaho, when proffered it by the Taft leaders.

The convention was in an uproar. The Massachusetts delegates defied "a steam roller" decision of Chairman Root, who held that when the vote was challenged it was not sufficient to answer "present." The ruling was appealed. The ruling on the appeal was not pushed and did not go before the house.

The Massachusetts men were in the exact centre of the building, standing on their chairs, shaking their fists, hissing and hurling execrations at the chairman, who had retired to his desk. When thirty policemen were called they quieted down and voted.

Although the hall was in confusion after the vote was announced, little enthusiasm was displayed, even when a band was brought in through one of the alley entrances.

The roll-call of the States for the nomination of a vice-presidential candidate was then ordered.

Votes for President were cast for Roosevelt, La Follette, Cummins and Hughes, although only the names of President Taft and La Follette were presented to the convention.

Many of the Roosevelt men, following the instructions of the Colonel, sat silently in their seats while the votes were being cast, taking no part at all in the proceedings.

Walter G. Harding, of Ohio, presented the name of the President to the convention. John Wanamaker and Nicholas Murray Butler were among those who made seconding speeches. M. B. Oldrich of Wisconsin, made the chief nominating speech for La Follette.

GREAT DEMONSTRATION AS TAFT IS AGAIN NOMINATED

Loyal Delegates Break Loose as Harding of Ohio Sounds Praises of the President.

PROMISE INQUIRY INTO LIVING COST.

The nominating of candidates followed the adoption of the platform. This platform favors a protective tariff, but says that there should be some reductions, declares that the recall of judges is unnecessary, favors treaties with Russia and other countries to protect American citizens abroad, promises an inquiry into the high cost of living and urges laws to insure the safety of ocean travel.

The reading of the Roosevelt statement asking his friends to take no part in the proceedings was the one dramatic incident of the day. When every contesting Taft delegation had been seated and Root was made permanent chairman by viva voce vote, he announced that Henry Allen of Kansas, an able and earnest Progressive, desired to make a statement.

"Roosevelt has withdrawn," was the word that ran around the hall in an excited shout, which swelled above the general disorder.

That was what the announcement amounted to. As Allen, square built, big voiced and impressive in manner, came forward, a hush like that of midnight fell over the restless crowd. On the floor, in the galleries, even on the platform where the National Committee men were gathered, there was not a whisper.

Allen looked over the crowd and raised his hand. Then he said slowly: "I have a statement to make for Theodore Roosevelt."

Instantly bedlam broke loose. The delegates of twenty States were on their feet yelling as if their lives depended on making themselves being heard. In the galleries there was little noise, but the uproar on the floor grew and grew until it seemed as if every one of the 1,078 delegates was yelling his loudest, all in one shrill key, and all with a lung power like that of a bull.

Soon the "March to Jericho" began. The banners of State after State, Pennsylvania first, then California, then New Jersey and soon Ohio, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, North Carolina, South Dakota, Missouri and Oklahoma were bobbing above the crowd, which clamoring delegates bore them down the centre aisle in front of the platform and back to their places. Harry New at the head of the Indiana delegation, at left of the platform, and James W. Wadsworth, commanding the New Yorkers just across the way, each planted himself at his standard and held it firmly lest it be carried away.

Allen of Kansas to the Rescue.

"Billy Cook" of Illinois, leading the fifty-six Roosevelt delegates from that State, attempted to tear the Illinois standard from its moorings. H. C. Hawbaker, the standard bearer and a Lorimer man, hooked Mr. Cook very neatly in the eye. There was a rush, a scrimmage, a hurry of policemen, and while the bulky form of Pearl Wight of Louisiana, who held a neighboring position, was thrust between the trouble-makers, the procession moved along. The banner was returned to its place, but scattered about among the black letters on their white ground were blood specks that remained red and suggestive to the end of the day.

At the end of fifteen minutes of tumult Root, who had been striving to conceal his nervousness under the air of a man bored to extinction, left the chair and disappeared in the gangway at the rear of the platform. Five minutes later he returned and hammered thrice with his gavel.

This attempt to stop the hurrah was met with a still more violent cheer, and a second effort met with the same result.

Then Root, who is never short of expedients, thought he would put it up to Allen. He whispered to the Kansan, and Allen, coming forward, raised his hand for silence. He got it after the delegates had devoted at least five minutes to noise.

Again raising his hand, Allen read Roosevelt's declaration. There were cheers for every paragraph, cheers that utterly drowned the groans and hisses that came from the Taft delegates scattered through the hall.

When Allen began his own statement silence fell again, but his vehement denunciation of what had been going on soon brought a spasmodic outburst of protest.

"Listen to me," he said, after the first of these outbursts. "Hear me out and we will promise to put no more men in the gangplank, to make no further attempt to impede the progress of the steam roller."

"Toot-Toot-Toot."

"Toot-toot," said a delegate in the rear of the hall.

"Toot-toot-toot," re-echoed a hundred others. "Hish-hish-hish," eried still others, imitating the exhaust of the roller.

When he again got the attention of the house Allen proceeded to read the statement of Roosevelt requesting that his followers in the convention take no part in the proceedings.

Alabama, Taft 22, 2 not voting; Arizona, Taft 6; Arkansas, Taft 17, one not voting; California, Taft 2, 24 not voting; Colorado, Taft 12; Connecticut, Taft 14; Delaware, Taft 6; Florida, Taft 12; Georgia, Taft 28; Idaho, Cummins 8, Taft 1.

Illinois for Roosevelt.

Illinois—Direct announced that under instruction of the primary law a number of the delegates felt they could not cancel their instructions, and would vote for Roosevelt. A rollcall of the State was demanded. The vote stood: Taft 2, Roosevelt 52, absent 2, not voting 2.

Indiana, Taft 20, Roosevelt 3, not voting 7; Iowa, Taft 16, Cummins 10; Kansas, Taft 2, not voting 18; Kentucky, Taft 24, Roosevelt 2; Louisiana, Taft 20; Maine, 12 not voting.

When Maryland was called, a rollcall was ordered. Maryland voted: Taft 1, Roosevelt 9, not voting 5, absent.

Massachusetts was challenged and a State rollcall ordered.

Chairman Root caused surprise when he directed the secretary to call the names of alternates of delegates who were present and not voting. The Massachusetts alternates at large are Taft men.

"The men from Massachusetts will walk out of the convention," said one of the Massachusetts delegates who stood in the centre of the excited group made up of the Roosevelt partisans. A delegate with a megaphone shouted, "You can steal from the people some of the time, but you can't steal from the people all the time."

Police Watch Massachusetts.

Policemen with drawn clubs marched up the centre aisle and took positions in front of the place reserved for the Massachusetts delegation. The tin whistle, in imitation of a steam whistle, came into frequent play.

Frederick Foodick, the leader of the Massachusetts delegation, who declared Massachusetts was a law-abiding State, led the revolt against the "steam roller" tactics of the chair.

"You stay there, Massachusetts, and we will stay with you!" shouted the California delegation.

Chairman Root announced: "The chair will say to the gentlemen that the vote of Massachusetts was challenged and the roll was ordered called. The rule requires that if a delegate is not present, the name of an alternate must be called."

"Is it not sufficient for the alternate to answer 'present'?" asked the protesting delegate.

Fosdick Appeals from Decision.

"The chair does not think that it is sufficient," replied Mr. Root. Mr. Fosdick appealed from the decision of the chair.

Mr. Root said that opportunity would be given to make the appeal, but it could not be made while the rollcall was being made.

"I defy the convention to make me vote for any man!" shouted Charles D. Baxter.

Cheer after cheer came from the Roosevelt supporters as the Massachusetts men recorded themselves as present and not voting.

The challenge was accepted by the Taft adherents, and they added to the echo at the Taft members of the delegation voted for the President. Massachusetts stood: Taft 20, not voting 16.

William Flinn of Pittsburgh, in the light of the ruling of the chairman, said he would cast the vote of Pennsylvania for John Doe.

Voting Is Resumed.

Michigan voted: Taft 29, Roosevelt 9, not voting, 1; Minnesota, not voting, 24; Mississippi, Taft 17, not voting, 3; Missouri, Taft 16, not voting, 20; Montana, Taft 8; Nebraska, Not voting, 14, Roosevelt 2; Nevada, Taft 6; New Hampshire, Taft 8; New Jersey, not voting, 28, Roosevelt 2.

New Mexico, Taft 7, Roosevelt 1; New York, not voting 4, Roosevelt 5, Taft 7.

North Carolina, Taft 1, Roosevelt 1, not voting 22; North Dakota, La Follette 10; Ohio, Taft 14, not voting 24; Oklahoma, Roosevelt 1, Taft 4, not voting 15; Oregon, Roosevelt 8, not voting 2.

Charles W. Alverson, the first man called from Oregon, said: "I refuse to vote when the cards are stacked."

Pennsylvania—Taft 5, Hughes 3, Roosevelt 2; absent 1, not voting 62. Rhode Island—Taft 10. South Carolina—Taft, 16, abs. 3, not voting 3. South Dakota—Roosevelt 5, La Follette 5. Tennessee—Taft 28, Roosevelt 1. Texas—Taft 31; absent 1, not voting 8. Utah—Taft 8. Vermont—Taft 6; not voting 2. Virginia—Taft 22; absent 1, not voting 1. West Virginia—Not voting 16. Wisconsin—La Follette 26. Wyoming—Taft 6. Alaska—Taft 2. District of Columbia—Taft 2. Hawaii—Taft 6. Philippines—Taft 2. Porto Rico —Taft 2.

The first great Taft demonstration of the convention for President Taft came when Warren G. Harding of Ohio advanced on the platform to make the nominating speech for the President.

The Taft demonstration started at 5:09. A Taft banner was carried through the hall. The New York delegation led the parade of the delegates. Texas, Mississippi, Indiana, Nevada, Colorado, New Hampshire, Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Tennessee, Florida and Washington joined in the parade.

The galleries joined in the demonstration. Delegates from the Taft States stood on their chairs and yelled vociferously. Harding walked up and down the platform, smiling.

"Four, four, four, years more of Taft."

Woman Waves Banner.

The Taft picture made a complete circuit of the hall, and then Harding grabbed the banner and waved it from the speaker's platform amid tremendous cheering.

At the end of ten minutes, Chairman Root gavelled for order. Charles P. Taft, the brother of the President, carrying the Ohio standard, marched in the parade.

Mrs. A. J. Gardner of Philadelphia stepped to the front platform and waved the Taft banner.

M. R. Olbrich of Wisconsin nominated La Follette.

A band of sixteen pieces waited outside the Coliseum to escort the Roosevelt "steam rolled" delegates to orchestra hall after the regular convention adjourned.

Everyone was good natured earlier in the day, when the steam roller was finishing its work on the credentials report.

Chairman Root advanced to the front of the platform to ask for order when the contests in the State at large case of Washington were called. In a pleasant little speech he asked a little more quiet.

"State the point."

"The steam roller is exceeding the speed limit."

"The point is sustained," smiled Root. "However, we must hasten somewhat for we have hopes of getting home for Sunday."

The reading clerk then began reading the majority report in the Washington case.

John J. Sullivan of Ohio presented the statement of the minority, and "in behalf of all Roosevelt members of the Committee on Credentials moved the adoption of the statement" as a substitute.

The statement charged that the contests in Washington were "all trumped up cases and made for the seating of all the Roosevelt delegates.

"Nearer My God, To Thee."

Watson, of Indiana, moved to table the minority motion, and to let the steam roller list go through.

ARMAGEDDON!

By MORTON BIRGE.

The shades of night were falling fast,
As from the Coliseum passed
One Taft machine with feeble blast:
"Armageddon!"

Steam roller never fek so mean
As that poor, battered Taft machine,
Which whistled to itself: "I've seen
Armageddon!

"O, Lord, but that was awful tough.
Believe me, 'tis no idle bluff
When I declare I've had enough
Armageddon!

"They say I won. I s'pose I did,
I just about held down the lid.
But ever after, Lord forbid
Armageddon!"

La Follette and Cummins Are Presented by Wisconsin and Iowa.

"Choo, choo, choo" began the ed, only to drop into the chorus delegates from the Roosevelt side. "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

They started to make a loud and lively imitation of a road roller in full operation. As the mimic escaping steam came hissing over the heads of the delegates the cries were heard:

"All aboard the choo-choo car."
"Hand your tracks."

And then, turning the situation into farce, they laughed and hoot-

The tune changed. Militant leaders swung into "Marching Through Georgia."

Chairman Root stopped the singing for Hugh T. Halbert of Minnesota to speak for the minority report.

FOUR ALARM FIRE IN STOCK YARDS

Chiefs from Four Cities Respond —Three Buildings and Many Sheds Destroyed.

Three large buildings and more than a score of cattle sheds were destroyed by a four-alarm fire which threatened the entire Brighton stock yards plant, in Brighton, yesterday afternoon. Fifteen hundred sheep and other live stock were rescued by employes, police and firemen. The damage was estimated at $15,000.

So intense was the heat from the flames that occupants of several tenements on Herrick street were driven from their homes. Fear that the fire would spread outside the stock yards caused the police to remove a hundred horses from nearby stables.

The fire started in a one and a half story structure known as the Morris Export building. This burned rapidly and the blaze communicated with the two and a half story building used as an office and salesroom building. From this the flames spread to the large story and a half structure known as the cow barn. This measured more than half a block in extent.

The wind carried the sparks in all directions and numerous smaller sheds under which cattle and hens sheltered, were destroyed. It was said the fire had been started by sparks from a passing locomotive.

The four alarms called out the fire chiefs from three cities and one town, along with Fire Commissioner Cole. Chief Handlett of Newton responded with one fire company from that city to help out. Other chiefs on hand were Chief Mullen, who headed the fire fighters, Chief Rich of Somerville and Chief Johnson of Brookline.

Further Ordeal for Evelyn Thaw Resumes Her Testimony Tomorrow

Improvement in Prisoner Makes Jerome Hint That He Is Being Given Medicine

NEW YORK, June 22.—The Thaw sanity hearing, which will be resumed at White Plains Monday, reveals that Evelyn Nesbit Thaw has lost the flower-like and fragile beauty which so startled the spectators at the original Thaw trial five years ago.

She is round in the face, as her pictures show. The artistic oval of that girlish face, which was a photographers' delight, has become lost in the fullness of feature.

Thaw seems dull and spiritless. Toward the close of the last session yesterday his answers to William Travers Jerome were listless. Nevertheless a certain improvement in his appearance led Jerome to hint that somebody was giving him tonic medicine.

Mrs. Thaw, on the contrary, is vivacious in intellect, if not in manner. She is quick and ready in her answers. When a line of questioning was begun which she did not wish to discuss, she became angry. When the queries were pressed upon her she became enraged. Her eyes blazed and her voice fairly hissed. She has diguantly refused to repeat the stories she told at the two Thaw trials, even the impersonal "Mister."

It is noticeable that she calls the petitioner "Thaw," without any prefix, not even the impersonal "Mister."

Missing Government Witness.

The missing government witness in the case was a topic of interested speculation today.

This witness, according to William Travers Jerome, who is handling the the State's case against Thaw's petition for release from Matteawan, is Sigmund Loewenstein, caterer at the Tombs prison in this city. Jerome says he disappeared suddenly, like Susan Merrill did, but that, unlike Mrs. Merrill, he had not been located up to the close of the sanity hearing yesterday afternoon.

"This Loewenstein," said Jerome, "possesses valuable information that we wish to produce as evidence. He has utterly vanished. He is under contract with the Department of Correction, but not even the Commissioner of Correction has the slightest idea where he is. He has not shown up at the Tombs or at his home. If he does not appear shortly he will forfeit his contract."

The prosecutor added that last Saturday Loewenstein came to the District Attorney's office on a summons and said that when Thaw was in the Tombs in 1906, he (Thaw) asked if there was any chance of his food being poisoned. Thaw was very insistent and it required much talk on the part of the Tombs' caterer to put him at ease.

The fact of this appears in the records kept in the Tomb's office, but for Jerome's purpose at this sanity hearing, it must be sworn to by Loewenstein in person.

Loewenstein made no objections when first questioned, it is said, to coming to the sanity hearing. But, when a process server sought him with a subpoena, he was not to be found.

"I make no charges," said Jerome, when relating this, "but you can draw your deductions."

Assistant-District Attorney O'Malley, who represents District Attorney Whitman at the sanity hearings, corroborated Jerome's story of the missing Loewenstein.

A singular fact has come to light. It is that shortly before J. W. Russell, superintendent of the State Asylum for the Criminal Insane at Matteawan, from which Harry K. Thaw is seeking to obtain his release, made the return to the habeas corpus writ which is now on record at White Plains he filed an entirely different document with Attorney-General Carmody.

The answer in his states that "the said Harry K. Thaw is of unsound mind and has not recovered."

The return for which this paper was substituted stated that "the said Harry K. Thaw is of unsound mind and has not recovered," and that "his release would be a menace to the peace and to the safety of the public."

It was learned that the substitution was made not more than two days after the original return was sent to Albany and that it is in existence and will be produced in court.

Mrs. Thaw continues to be as much an object of interest as Thaw. At the closing session this week she wore a suit of military cut, with a black hat which was trimmed with a waving yellow plume.

In one of Thaw's notes to Delphin M. Delmas, his former counsel, he wrote: "Joe (Thaw's pet name for his brother Josiah is cranker than I." When this was read the wife and her husband exchanged smiles for the first time during the present hearing. During the tedious reading of the letters Evelyn Thaw sat quietly in the witness chair. Though lacking completely her former vivaciousness, she evidently enjoyed being the centre of attraction. Once, during a hiatus in the testimony, she petulantly refused Justice Keogh's offer to allow her to resume her seat among the spectators.

MORE FAMILIES AID MALDEN MEAT STRIKE

Mrs. Finkelstein, Leader, Tells of Success in Fighting Trust.

Mrs. Annie Finkelstein, organizer and leader of the Malden women's meat strike, says that the women were forced to strike because the men are cowards when it comes to action.

Over four hundred Malden housewives are united in this strike against the high cost of meat. The women won't buy any meat or let any one else do so if they can help it. They have persuaded or forced several provision dealers to quit selling meat, so as to make the wholesalers lower the price if possible.

Arrests have been made on account of meat strike troubles and the housewife-strikers are militant. They say they will spread the strike to Boston before they finish.

"It's because the men are cowards that we women have finally been compelled to take things into our own hands and organize a Kosher meat strike," said Mrs. Finkelstein, as she sat on the plaza of her Malden home yesterday.

"We have watched the price of meat soar higher and higher each year. The men have to feed for it. But when we women saw that something must be done after two cents more had been added to the price we started out and we're doing it."

The Trusts Must Go.

"How long do you expect the strike to last?" was asked.

"Until we get the trusts to do what we want them to do," Mrs. Finkelstein replied.

"When the strike first started there were but few women who appeared at the meeting which I called. Now there are more than 400 families in Malden alone who are on strike."

Mrs. Finkelstein's brown eyes snap and sparkle delightfully while she tells of her experiences.

"How did this strike start?" was asked.

"Well, I'll tell you," she said. "I had been talking to my husband some time about the cost of meat. One day I went to the market and found that the price had been raised 2 cents. Naturally I couldn't blame the butcher, for he explained to me that the cost to him had advanced 2 cents. I told my husband that something must be done, and that I was going to do it.

"I spoke to several of my friends about a strike. Some thought I was crazy and others agreed with me. I called a meeting. We organized and went to the butchers and told them that we were not going to buy any more of their meat at those prices and ordered them not to sell any more to any one.

Waging Stubborn Fight.

"The following day only one market was open. We told the butcher he must close. In his market was twenty pounds of meat. When he refused to close we seized the twenty pounds, took it home and threw it away.

"The following day there were no shops open. One meat wagon came along. I women gathered about it. The butcher mocked at them and told them that he was to sell meat. One woman grabbed the package of meat from him. He struck her and both were arrested.

"That woman had the courage of her convictions, the same as the rest of us have. She was sent to jail, but we bailed her out. That's the kind of woman we're proud of."

Judge Moore Takes Fourth Marathon

Victory at London Horse Show Makes Him Permanent Owner of Cup.

LONDON, June 22.—The fourth coaching marathon for four-in-hand teams, which were driven to the International Horse Show at Olympia from Hampton Courts today, was won by Judge W. H. Moore, of Chicago, who thus becomes permanent owner of the Coaching Marathon Challenge Cup.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt was only able to secure sixth place among the eleven starters. His failure to make his usual good showing was attributable in the judges' view to his new team, which is not well matched.

Judge Moore was also successful in Class 48 for pairs of harness horses shown to a victoria, sociable or barouche, which he won with his pair, Lord Seaton and Lady Seaton.

Sisters to Wed Brothers.

BROCKTON, June 22.—Two sisters Miss Louise F. Howe and Miss Maud Howe, daughters of Mrs. Anna T. Howe, of No. 14 Holmes street, will become the brides of brothers, Ernest A. Carlson and Oscar N. Carlson, both of No. 53 Denton street, within a few weeks.

EX-GOV. CLEAVES OF MAINE IS DEAD

PORTLAND, Me., June 22.—Former Governor Henry R. Cleaves died today at his apartments in a hotel here. He had been critically ill for the past month and little hope for his recovery had been held the past three weeks, during which he sank gradually until the end. He suffered from heart and kidney trouble.

Youthful, Wrinkleless Skin Easy to Have

(Elberta Reid in Woman's Tribune.)

You who desire to retain a youthful appearance will do well to make the acquaintance of the two simple, but valuable, prescriptions here given.

To make an effective wrinkle-chaser, mix an ounce of powdered alum in a half pint witch hazel. Bathe the face in the solution—immediately every wrinkle is affected, as it acts wonderfully on sagging facial muscles, also, the lotion possessing remarkable astringent and tonic properties.

To get rid of an aged, faded or discolored complexion, but an ounce of common mercolized wax at any druggstore and apply nightly as you would cold cream, erasing this morning with soap and water. This will slowly absorb the unsightly surface skin, revealing the younger, brighter, healthier skin underneath. I know of nothing so quick this treatment as a facial rejuvenator.

ELEVATED STRIKE MAY COME TO AN END TOMORROW; MEN EXPECT TO MEET OFFICIALS

DIRECTORS of the Boston Elevated Railway Company are expected to meet tomorrow or Tuesday to consider the demands of the striking conductors and motormen. Announcement of the probable meeting was made yesterday as a result of efforts by Mayor Fitzgerald to bring about an adjustment of the differences between the strikers and the company.

It was said last night a settlement of the strike may be reached in the meeting. The directors will be told just what are the proposals of the union, and it is expected definite action will be taken.

Another note was sounded by the executive committee of the union in their endeavor to have the strike arbitrated. In a letter to the State Board of Arbitration and Conciliation the committee demanded an investigation.

The board is urged to conduct the inquiry at once.

Mayor Acts to End Strike.

The Mayor yesterday conferred with a committee representing the strikers. Then the Mayor talked over the situation with President Herbert of the Elevated and was told the president saw no reason why the road should change its policy, but that the directors might consider the question tomorrow or Tuesday.

At the conference in the Mayor's office, James F. Moriarty, vice-president of the Central Labor Union, demanded that the men receive the laws justly, "both on strike and all others in the employ of the Boston Elevated." He complained of gambling in barns of the Elevated and said the police department furnished men paid for by the city to ride on cars in other towns and cities. The protest was sent to Police Commissioner O'Meara.

Mayor Fitzgerald agreed to serve on a committee of citizens who are to try to effect a settlement.

Strikers' Statement.

Strong denial was made last night by the strike committee of the striking Elevated employes to the statement of the Shawmuts, that the number of men on strike does not exceed 200.

The strike committee make reply as follows:

The statement made by the unrented loyalists concerning the number of men on strike, as published in this afternoon papers, is so untruthful that it is scarcely deserving of any extended reply from our committee.

If the City Council, or the Boston Chamber of Commerce of any other representative body outside the Loyal Legion of Shawmuts desires to verify the fitness of our statement that we have 4,000 men out on strike, they may satisfy themselves by visiting our division headquarters on Monday when strike benefits are paid.

We will pay $200,000 out in strike benefits on Monday. This is apportioned at the rate of five dollars per man. A simple example in arithmetic is sufficient to determine how many men we have on strike.

We are perfectly willing that any representative body investigate for itself and determine the actual condition of affairs.

While we hope for the best possible results from the request made to the Elevated management by Mayor Fitzgerald since they came with our union committee, our strike still is on, with fully 4,000 men out, and prepared to stick all Summer if necessary to maintain their God-given right to organize.

Despite the fact that standing bonuses, ranging from $100 to $500, are offered by the company for each to desert the union, less than a dozen have so far forgotten their manhood as to sell out since the strike was called.

Fay's View of Situation.

After the conference with Mayor Fitzgerald, Fred Fay, national organizer of the strikers, said:

"Mayor Fitzgerald assured our committee he would continue to do all in his power to induce the railroad company to concede the demands of the men. He also informed us that he considered the requests of the men reasonable and importantly just.

"He further assured us that in the event of a condition presenting itself which, in our opinion, required his presence in this city, he would immediately return from the convention at Baltimore to assist in every possible way in the adjustment of the men's grievances and end the present deplorable conditions existing in Boston."

We have been met by the company with denials of our requests, expensive advertisements in the newspapers and an attempt to create false public sentiment by subsidizing the newspapers. The Boston Elevated Railway Company has refused to listen to the oral or written arguments of four thousand men fighting for a principle, many of whom have been in this company's employ for more than a quarter of a century.

This strike is costly to the company, both men and the public. It is dangerous to the public because the men brought in here from other cities are inexperienced and of bad character.

We have always been willing and are now to submit this controversy to any disinterested tribunal in this Commonwealth, but we have been openly and arrogantly defied.

Statement by Non-Strikers.

A committee representing the Boston Elevated Fraternal Protective Association, the members of which have not joined the strike, issued a statement signed by James J. Comfort, Jeremiah E. O'Brien and Peter J. Wahlren. In the statement the committee says:

Under normal conditions the Boston Elevated Railway Company employs about 6,000 men as conductors, motormen, inspectors, starters, etc. The membership of the Fraternal Protective Association comprises, in round numbers, 4,100 employes.

A careful canvass shows only about 1900 men went out on strike, or, in other words, deserted their jobs at the command of the leaders of the strike promoters. Of that number 200 are not affiliated with the car men's union, left split work through fear and under pressure of threatening influences. To that 900 may be added about 150 more who were discharged by the company just previous to the strike for various offenses, mostly for failure in the performance of their duties.

Therefore, the statements issued by the publicity agents of the strikers, that 4,000 are on strike, is shown to be false and absurd.

Until quite recently, when an Elevated employe had a grievance he was obliged to act as his own representative and advocate in the presentation of that grievance to the officials of the company. Some of the men did not like to do that, and so it was deemed wise to form the Fraternal and Protective Association.

ROXBURY WOMAN IS DEAD IN AUTO WRECK

Four Others Injured in Accident on the Portland-Saco Road.

SACO, Me., June 22.—One Boston woman is dead, another is at the Trull Hospital in Biddeford seriously injured, and one man was probably fatally hurt as a result of two automobile accidents on the Portland road here today. Two other men were slightly injured.

The dead:

Mrs. Carl M. T. Hill of Roxbury.

The injured:

Mrs. W. L. Straus of Cambridge, fractured arm and injuries to body.

George W. Ayres of Saco, slightly injured.

Ernest L. Ayers of Saco, slightly hurt.

Mrs. Hill, who died at the Trull Hospital at noon; Mrs. Straus, and the latter's husband, W. L. Straus of Cambridge, were in the Straus auto traveling from Portland when the machine ran into a telegraph pole and a tree on a curve near the Goosefolly bridge. The three persons were thrown headlong from the auto, Mrs. Hill sustaining a fractured skull. Straus escaped injury.

Wellesley "Poem" On 'Obadiah,' Hopeful Bud

Fancy Such a Name in Botany Course, But "O" Is Now a Bush.

A Wellesley College undergraduate has burst into verse about "Obadiah."

"Obadiah" wouldn't grow, being watched too closely. But when the fair collegian let him alone "Obadiah" thrived. Also he winked at her.

The collegian felt so tickled that she wrote a "pome" about "Obadiah" which was published in the current issue of the College News, as follows:

"Once I had a Botany bud.
I named it Obadiah.
I'll tend you faithfully, I said,
To 'B' I will aspire.

"For days and days I cared at him,
My feelings you may judge,
For, though the other buds were blooming,

"And then, at last, 'Watched buds,' I said,
'They never bloom, you know.
I'll leave you Obadiah,
And give you time to grow.'

"Then Obadiah winked and said,
'It's time I showed me push.'
When later I returned to him,
Obadiah was a bush."

Yes, "Obadiah" was only a bush in a botany course, but he became famous. The question remains, however: "How many girls would name even a bush Obadiah? Why not 'Percival' or 'Algernon' or 'Jimmy'?

WHY DR. HAMILTON IS LEAVING TUFTS

He Says Trustees Needed a Solicitor of Funds More Than an Educator.

President Frederick W. Hamilton of Tufts College resigned from that office because the Board of Trustees of the College wanted a solicitor of funds rather than an educator and an administrator for a president, according to the President's statement in an interview yesterday.

"The fundamental differences between the trustees and myself," declared Dr. Hamilton, "has been the fact that the board conceived my duties to be those of a solicitor of funds, an idea to which I took exception. I always conceived my position to be that of an educator and an administrator. It really all simmers down to the question of the real duties of the college president, whether he is to be an educator or a solicitor."

Dr. Hamilton said he had arranged with the trustees for a leave of absence until the first of next year and that his resignation would be in their hands at that time.

As to Dr. Hamilton's successor, Tufts alumni seen last night thought that an executive, more of a business type than of the academic, would be the next president of the college.

Boston Girl Studies Montessori School

Miss Harriet Cordelia Gould of Radcliffe Favored Student at Rome.

ROME, June 22.—Among those who will graduate in June from the Montessori School here is Miss Harriet Cordelia Gould of Boston, a graduate of Radcliffe College, in whose Mme. Montessori has taken a great personal interest and has given not unusual opportunities for mastering all the details of her system.

Before returning to Boston Miss Gould will visit the Montessori schools in Berlin and Paris.

Two visitors to Rome also interested in the Montessori schools are Miss Lelia Laughlin, daughter of the Pittsburgh steel magnate, and Miss Martha Berry of Rome, Ga. They are the guests of Ambassador and Mrs. O'Brien, who are chaperoning them in local society.

Miss Laughlin's brother is a secretary of the American Embassy in Rome. Miss Berry is the founder of the well-known Berry school for the education of the poor white boys and girls living in the mountain districts of Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Alabama.

'JOE' VOKES PLANS ANNUAL 'MOONLIGHT'

Theatre Advertising Agent Promises Sail June 29 Will Be Successful.

Joseph W. Vokes, advertising agent for the Shubert and Majestic theatres, will conduct his annual moonlight excursion on Saturday evening, June 29. Sea sickness is not known on one of these excursions and Mr. Vokes generally looks very carefully after the climatic conditions that make a harbor excursion to Nahant or out by Boston Light a very comfortable proposition.

"Joe" Vokes always has a full plenty of company on these moonlight trips of his and the only reason for not going is either because one is crippled or on the dangerous list in a hospital.

The excursion this year, the sixth, will include a sail around the harbor and down as far as the big, white lighthouse, then over to Bass Point, Nahant, where the excursionists will have an hour and thirty minutes to eat, sing or dance.

Conductor Tobin of the Shubert Theatre Orchestra will be on the job with all his orchestra men. The start will be from Otis Wharf at 10:45 p. m. and the party will reach Otis Wharf on the return trip in plenty of time to reach home by any sort of conveyance.

Big Fire Sale of Mattresses

EXPLOSION DRIVES OUT FIRE SQUAD

Hot Air Blast Endangers Many at Hub Blaze

The members of Engine Companies 6, 8, 4, and 26 had a narrow escape from serious injury by being blown down some by a heavy explosion of hot air which blew in the heating boiler, at 99 and 101 Richmond street, yesterday afternoon.

The most damage was done to the stock of the Fabin Furniture Company, which was the place of a conflagration. The other occupants of the building are W. H. Leavitt, head agent for the Atlantic Sugar Company, first floor; the National Spring Bed Company, second and third floors, and the French Range Company, fourth floor.

The accompanying newspaper clipping tells the story. The National Spring Bed Co., after adjusting their loss with the insurance company, decided to dispose of these mattresses immediately. Being the only Cash Store in Boston we were naturally given the preference over our competitors and succeeded in buying the entire stock on hand at 50c on the dollar. Read the items below and you will get some idea of the immense values offered.

CUDAHYS RUN AWAY AND WED ONCE MORE

Reconciled Couple, Who Denied They Need Remarry, Have Civil Ceremony.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 22.—Mr. and Mrs. "Jack" Cudahy are married again. It has become known that he couple, who were remitted a short time ago following their two years' separation, had a second ceremony performed at Excelsior Springs, Mo., on Wednesday night.

The Cudahys, who maintained when they first became reconciled that another marriage was not necessary because their faith did not recognize the validity of divorce, stole away from Kansas City in an automobile. Before they went they procured a marriage license. Now it is known they were married in Excelsior Springs by A. H. Epelton, a justice of the peace.

The four children are thought to have had much to do with patching up the differences between husband and wife, after which they began housekeeping again at No. 3527 Main street, where Mrs. Cudahy had lived since a short time after the divorce.

At the Cudahy home few details of the reunion were given out. But Mr. Cudahy and Mrs. Cudahy were there. Both admitted the reconciliation. Mr. Cudahy, particularly, refused to give out anything, and it was only from hurried snatches of talk that any facts could be gathered.

"The Cudahys have been together only a few days," said a close friend. "You know the belief of persons brought up in the Catholic religion that divorce is not binding. Just after the first trouble Mrs. Cudahy was influenced into thinking otherwise, and Mr. Cudahy granted her what in the matter. But recently they became convinced that, canonically, they were yet man and wife. However, the idea of reconciliation has been a matter of a rather short time."

The four children—Edna, aged eleven; Catherine, aged nine; Elizabeth, aged eight, and Michael, the four-year-old baby—played an important part in the reconciliation. The Circuit Court here will be asked to return them to their parents.

ELLEN FARNSWORTH, WHO BECAME BRIDE OF ALFRED LOOMIS

Miss Ellen Holman Farnsworth, a Vincent Club girl, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Farnsworth of Beacon street, was married at noon yesterday to Alfred Lee Loomis, son of the late Dr. Henry P. Loomis of Madison avenue, New York city, in St. Pauls Episcopal Church at Dedham. The wedding was attended by society people from Boston, Brookline, New York, Chicago and Denver, Col. Bishop Edward Parker of New Hampshire officiated, assisted by the pastor, Rev. Francis Lee Whittemore of Dedham.

The bride was given away by her father. Francis Murray of New York was the best man, Miss Marion Shaw of Boston was the maid or honor. The bridesmaids were Misses Iphina Otis of New York, Katharin Amory, Ruth Nickerson and Elinor Quincy of Boston.

The bride wore a gown of wite satin cut on train and trimmed with white lace. She wore a tulle veil and carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. The maid of honor and bridesmaides wore gowns of white mousseline, trimmed with white ribbons. They wore white picture hats and carried white roses.

The ushers were Newton Bass of New York, James Grant of Denver, Alvin Farwell of Chicago, Frederick Murray of Chicago, Farrar Batison of New York and Henry Farnsworth of Dedham, a brother of the bride, and Miles Hanna of Boston.

Immediately after the ceremony there was a reception and dinner at the Summer home of the bride's parents in Dedham.

The guests were received on the lawn under a large marquee. Dinner was served in the open air. Among those who attended were a large number of members of the Vincent Club and of the Chilton Club, of which the bride was also a member. After a wedding journey the couple will make their home in Tuxedo.

BERTRAM SPENCER TO DIE IN CHAIR

Slayer of Martha Blackstone Will Hear His Doom in Court This Week.

Bertram G. Spencer, the slayer of Martha B. Blackstone at her home in Springfield, on the evening of March 31, 1910, has lost his fight for life, and must die in the electric chair unless the Governor and his Council intervene. He is now in Hampden County Jail, and he will be sentenced this week by Judge Crosby.

The Supreme Court has overruled all of his exceptions.

Spencer's act was the culmination of a series of burglaries that so terrorized the city of Springfield that the residents of that city have not yet forgotten the affair.

Spencer was a sort of Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde. He worked in a provision store during the day; had the confidence of his employer; was popular socially throughout the city and was one of those that worked with other citizens in an endeavor to round up the burglar.

Unsuspected for Weeks.

But it was Spencer himself that was committing these acts, and while in the house of the Blackstone family he was discovered and he shot Miss Blackstone, a Springfield school teacher.

For weeks he was unsuspected, although the Springfield police and the State police were scouring the city for the murderer. He remained quietly at work at the provision store where the chief topic of discussion was the murder of Miss Blackstone.

A clew in the shape of a locket with the initials "B. S. S." engraved upon it was the link that brought the police to his home in April, 1910, and he was confronted with the locket and arrested.

A Sensational Trial.

Friends throughout the city rallied to his defence and his trial in October, 1911, was sensational. At times he raved in the court. He attempted to jump out of the prisoner's cage. The jury found him guilty, but he was not sentenced. His counsel filed a bill of exceptions and took the case to the Supreme Court in the hope of a new trial.

Spencer was confined to the Bridgewater Insane Asylum from September 12, 1910, to August 1, 1911, for observation as to his sanity, and Dr. L. Vernon Briggs and Dr. Edward B. Lane both testified at his trial that he was sane.

ROYALL HOUSE LAWN FETE.

Famous Old Medford Place Turned Into Fairyland.

A lawn party, under the joint auspices of the Royall House Association and the Medford Visiting Nurse Association, was held yesterday on the grounds of this historic old Royall House, Medford, of Revolutionary fame. The large sum which was netted was turned over to the Visiting Nurse Association. The grounds of the famous old mansion were transformed into a veritable fairy land. A feature was a drill by twenty girls, under ten years of age. There were also fancy dances by Vivian Beaman, Alice Lincoln, Marion Hervey and Madeline Frost. The executive committee included Mrs. E. H. Phillips, Miss Helen T. Wills, Miss J. M. Dinsmore and Mrs. E. W. Hayes.

QUICK WIT SAVES BOY.

Youngster on Pole Caught in Improvised Net.

LOWELL, June 22.—When playing "follow my leader" today Elmer Goyette, twelve years old, of No. 29 Joliet avenue, this city, climbed to the top of a twenty-foot telegraph pole and seized a live wire. John Ducharrie, a furniture mover, who was passing in his wagon, attempted to climb the pole. Failing, Ducharrie made a life net out of burlaps. Yelling "Let go," the lad Goyette dropped into it. He was taken to a hospital, suffering from severe burns, but will live.

PRAISES OF TAFT ARE SOUNDED BY HARDING

CHICAGO, June 22.—Warren G. Harding of Ohio presented the name of President Taft to the convention. He said:

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the convention: The first utterance of the first Republican National Convention ever assembled in resolution declared that the maintenance of the principles promulgated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the Federal Constitution is essential to the preservation of our republican institutions.

"Fifty-six years have now altered that truth. Since that seemingly inspired utterance, reflected in both the nation and spirit of the party under whose banners we are met to-day, the Republican standard-bearer, the Republican party and a Republican Nation have written the most glorious half century of progress and accomplishment ever penned of any national life.

"Glorying in this retrospection and exulting in anticipation, this great council of a great party will have met in vain unless by utterance and by action it consecrates anew that early plight of faith.

"The world has not yet seen the perpetuat republic, but ours gives promise, and it has seemed to me that an infinite Hand in the consciousness of divine strength wrote hope and faith into our new world beginning. Through such belief, the highest patriotism recommits us today to the preservation of the heritage bequeathed through the blessings and sacrifice and wisdom of the fathers.

"The People's Rule."

"You have heard much lately about the people's rule. Mr. Chairman and sirs, the people's rule is no new discovery to a sovereign American people. Nor is demagogic employment of the terms new to the world's hearing. Through such demagogic employment, centuries ago republics tottered and fell and republican liberties were lost. Human rights and their defence are as old as civilization; but, more important to us, the founding American fathers wrote the covenant of a people's rule into the bond of national life, beyond all ensnare or abridgement.

"The American people literally began to rule in 1776, and there has not been and never will be any usurpation of that power. They ruled when they assented to Washington's declination of a third term of the Presidency, and when, with phophetic foresight, he admonished them, 'Ever to be on guard against the passions that come of misrepresentation, and tend to render alien to one another those who ought to be ties in fraternal affection.' The people ruled when our nationality was endangered, and the forever indissoluble ties were sealed anew by the master hand and martyred life of Abraham Lincoln. The people were ruling when the first complete Democratic victory in thirty years brought its blight of adversity, and the same people ruled when they transferred a crown of thorns into a wreath of bloom, redolent of the perfume of restored prosperity.

"Inspired by McKinley."

"They also ruled when they turned the wails of distress to the glad hosanna of a prosperous people, inspired by William McKinley. The same people, a plain people and a sane people, ruled in the unloosing of the American conscience that marks a new era in our national life. They do rule and will rule wherever they bear the sceptre of citizenship and move in the light of intelligent and unfettered public opinion, which is the law of enlighted nations.

"They are ruling today, shielded by the law's supremacy, and safeguarded by understanding. And they are ruling with unwavering faith and increased confidence to that fine embodiment of honesty, that fearless exponent of the law, that inspiring personification of courage, that matchless exemplar of justice, that glorious apostle of peace and amity—William Howard Taft.

"Sirs, I have heard men arrogate to themselves the title of 'progressive Republicans,' seemingly forgetting that progression is the first essential to Republican fellowship. Progress was pronounced at the baptismal font of our party christening, and Republican progress is the measure of American progress, orderly and enduring.

"Progression is not proclamating or palaver. It is not pretense nor play on prejudice.

"Taft Greatest Progressive."

"Progression is everlastingly lifting the standards that marked the end of the world's march yesterday and planting them on new and advanced heights today. Tested by such a standard, President Taft is the greatest progressive of the age.

"Not he that breaks the dame, but he that, through channels of the state, conveys a people's wish, is great. His name is pure, his name is free.

"I can believe, Mr. Chairman, that the turbulent, the unreal, the agitation, this cauldron on the fire of the national life, is directly a symptom of human progress and indirectly a testimony to Republican accomplishment.

"Call For Sober Leadership."

"The imperious call of people's higher aspirations must be answered in deliberation through logical and lawful sequence, through the consciousness of sober and righteous leadership and need of justice. Justice to a party, a people and a nation demands that this Republican convention enlist again under the just leadership of President Taft.

"Opposition to his renomination is as yearly without precedent as it is without reason or excuse. This opposition is not born of expediency, but a triumphant Republican party is not one of expediency. While we have gone on to successive victories, holding measures above men and principles above personalities, and aiming always at the highest, we have been so committed to abiding principles that every utterance of fifty years is in consonance with our declarations of today. The common enemy has been the party of expediency, catching up ephemeral whims, parroting new troubles, helping the sale of its ship of state to the winds of new grievances or the recrudescent old and rarely exploded past.

"And, sirs, this proudly reminds you that not one of her six Republican sons who have borne the party's national banner ever trailed it in defeat. The record of the present Republican administration is not only proof of the correctness and the wisdom in our party declarations and an impassable barrier to self repudiation, but the record is impregnable to Democratic assault.

"During the greater part of more than a half-century our party has stood square for this Nation's weal or woe. There is not a Republican who is not proud of the record of that time or of the men, chosen as we chose today, who bore the party banners and wrought their lives and characters into the very fabric of our nationality.

"As Patient as Lincoln."

"I can see them now, colossal Americans reversed in recollection, stalwarts in history's accurate estimate. Moved by this review, exclusively and preciously American, I present to you today a leader, who in a composite of the virtues of all those so deservedly enshrined in our party pantheon—William Howard Taft—as wise and patient as Abraham Lincoln, as modest and dauntless as Ulysses S. Grant, as moderate and as loving as Rutherford B. Hayes, as patriotic and intellectual as James A. Garfield, as courtly and generous as Chester A. Arthur, as learned in true law as Benjamin Harrison, as sympathetic and brave as William McKinley, as progressive as his predecessor, with a moral stamina, breadth of view and sturdy Americanism, all his own.

"Rejoicing in the gratifying record of things done, confident of the triumphant movement to the things we are pledged to do, glad of the hopes and higher aspirations of our people, measuring his capacity by the exactions of experience, testing his patriotism by every demand of honesty, courage and justice, knowing his devotion to his country and its people, on behalf of Ohio and for one hundred millions of advancing Americans, I name for renomination our great President, William Howard Taft."

CLOSING INCIDENTS OF THE CONVENTION

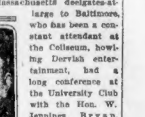
By ELIAS M'QUAID.

CHICAGO, June 22.—Frank J. Donahue, one of the Massachusetts delegates-at-large to Baltimore, who has been a constant attendant at the Coliseum, howling Dervish entertainment, had a long conference at the University Club with the Hon. W. Jennings Bryan. Their chat was all about Judge Alton B. Parker and the temporary chairmanship at Baltimore. Mr. Bryan said, however, for the one hundred thousandth time, that he is not a candidate for the presidential nomination.

Jeremiah A. Desmond of Boston authorizes me to say that until this week he had believed the F. Opper "Uncle Trusty" cartoons to be the most atrocious slanders imaginable on the Hon. Elihu Root of the Nation's weal or woe. There is not a Republican who is not proud of the record of that time or of the men, chosen as we chose today, who bore the party banners and wrought their lives and characters into the very fabric of our nationality.



Hon. Marshall J. Hapgood of Peru, Vt., who came all the way to Chicago to ask for a platform pledge in favor of the direct election of President and Vice-President, wants it distinctly understood that this does not mean a bolt in his State fight for the publication of campaign expenses. The Republicans hold their State convention next Thursday.

When this dispatch was filed the thing that was dying the hardest in Chicago was the La Follette boom. Fifty Wisconsins tramped the city last night from big hotel to big hotel crying "We want Bob." They carried new banners, on the business ends of which were fastened La Follette lithographs and photos. One significant poster said "La Follette, a Progressive When the Way Was Hard."

At least a dozen from New England have said to me that Francis J. Heney of California reminds them of the late John B. Morrin. Heney, leader of the Taft movement committed on Hartford of New Hampshire. The Portsmouth editor had been going after the Roosevelt boom for a long day like a little gamecock, especially whenever Heney sailed into A. M. Stevenson of California as "Big Steve" and threatened to "get him yet." "Yes," Heney said to the aggravating Hartford, "and I'll get you, yet, too. You're one of them."

State Senator Arthur L. Nason of Haverhill, the first Progressive ever elected to office in Massachusetts, is authority for the statement that George W. Perkins, Gifford Pinchot, Medill McCormick, Frank A. Munsey and Thomas W. Lawson will put up the money for a great national progressive campaign. Colonel Roosevelt's running mate, Senator Nason says, will be a Democrat. Nason early declared that the eighteen Roosevelt delegates from Massachusetts will take no part in the convention beyond the report for the Credentials Committee.

"This," the Haverhill man said, "on the ground that fraudulent delegates do not and cannot speak for the Republican party."

Alvin G. Weeks, also a Roosevelt delegate, on the other hand maintains that the Coliseum convention should do its work. In the opinion of the big Fall River lawyer the Chicago ticket should be:

For President—"Big Steve" of Colorado.

For Vice-President—Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania.

Senator William A. L. Bissiy is not among those who desire to hurry to Massachusetts. At 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon Senator Bassey was rooting for anything that will bang this convention up, until next Tuesday. It seems that there's a big Sunday boat excursion advertised for Milwaukee "Round trip one dollar." The Senator is anxious to find out if Milwaukee, when all is said and done, is as famous as they say it is. Martin Hays of Brighton has promised basely to discover Milwaukee with him.

Albert J. Precourt, the Manchester, N. H., druggist, an alternate from the first congressional district, has been away from home so long that he now prefaces his remarks by saying, "When I was back East," or "When I lived in New Hampshire," etc., etc. It wouldn't have been nearly so trying a week if Chicago had open trolley cars. Poor Chicago.

In the middle of the afternoon on Saturday our old friend, D. H. Lamberton, was still whooping 'er up for Mead for Vice-President and telling everybody that the Governor of Maine was bound to win unless there was a sudden and unexpected shift. Lamberton hoped to have it all over, however, in time to reach New York Tuesday evening and be present at the marriage of his son. Meanwhile Dr. Mead, wonderfully serene, is paying less serious attention to the hurly-burly of politics than other Republicans in Chicago. He is enjoying the show to the limit.

I thought it was about time today to sense out what the strenuous world in general thinks of all this fuss, so I hunted up my old playmate, George Gardner, who has not only fought Jack Johnson and Jim Flynn and all the rest of them, but who knows W. R. as well as you know the ear on the beat. George, who hails from New Hampshire via Lowell, Boston and San Francisco, is the manager of "Andy" Craig's German Village Cafe, in South State street. On the side he runs a cigar factory and keeps his money in seven banks. Being strenuous, I expected to find Gardner ready to lead an assault on the Coliseum.

"No sire," said the Lowell boy. "In this contest I am for President Taft. Well, I'll tell you, I have been all over the world, and I have had all the hot air stuff that I care for. And besides that I'm a Democrat."

Assistant United States District Attorney J. B. Ferber has a sumptuous lunch coming to him from the Longworths. Congressman Longworth, "Princess" Alice, as they call her in the convention, Mrs. Roosevelt and Cornelius Vanderbilt were so absorbed in the strenuous doings at the Coliseum that they forgot all about lunch. The Boston attorney had fortified himself and friends for an all-day and night session and more than divided" up with the Roosevelt party. Alice ate two chicken sandwiches with the gusto of a kid at school. "Bully!" she said, in the vernacular of her father. "I was almost starved."

Alice, munching sandwiches while the convention was in full swing and while Root and Crane were running the steamroller perfectly, was one of the sights of the convention.

"The men from Massachusetts are the most polite we have of all here," a demure Miss said as she sold a rose to ex-Senator "Charlie" Innes.

"We thought they were brusque, but they are all so nice."

"And they use such perfect English, too," put in another, evidently a college girl. The flower saleswomen for the Frances Willard Hospital. The flower girls were Chicago's fairest daughters and from the best of its families.

James P. Magenis, of Boston and Representative John H. Cogswell of Lynn, threaten doing something to Boston newspaper reporters when they reach home. The papers has it that Magenis kissed his wife good-bye at the South Station, and that Cogswell had his wife on Lila train with him. Two letters, one from the wife of Magenis, and the other from the wife of Representative Cogswell, have reached Chicago. "I'll get a stiff as liir as Teddy's was for the chap who wrote that. If I can only find him," says the Progressive Republican from Lynn.

Speaker Grafton D. Cushing and Representative "Jim" Cavanaugh of Everett are the two tallest men in the convention. There are men heavier in avoirdpois on the floor, but none taller than the two Legislators from the Bay tate. "Holy smoke!" exclaimed a delegate from the Pine Tree State section. "They say the East has gone back, but it don't look it with these fellows."

Arthur Dehon Hill is wearing a straw hat that looks worse even than Teddy's after his strenuous experience. It was a Panama when it left Boston, now it is scarcely recognizable as a hat. But the former district attorney was up against some things here—hat and all.

PLATFORM ADOPTED BY G. O. P. CONVENTION

CHICAGO, June 22.—The Platform adopted by the Republican National Convention, while containing no mention of woman suffrage or the initiative and referendum, and denouncing the judicial recall in no uncertain terms, included many of the other important features for which the progressive wing of the party has been fighting.

The recommendation for action-wide primaries was defeated by one vote in the platform committee. Roosevelt's federal trade commission idea is incorporated as a part of the Taft anti-trust plank, providing for criminal prosecution of violators of the anti-trust laws. The Roosevelt people were so well satisfied with the platform as a whole they they decided to present no minority report.

"They gave us practically everything we asked for," said Governor Hadley.

The platform pledges to strive not only in the nation, but in the several States to enact legislation to safeguard the public health, limit effectually the labor of women and children, and to protect wage earners engaged in dangerous occupations and to enact workmen's compensation laws.

The platform reaffirms the party's intention to uphold at all times the authority and integrity of the courts, both State and Federal, and demands that the power of the courts to protect life, liberty and property shall be held inviolate.

The platform favors legislation which will bring more hasty decisions by the courts in both civil and criminal cases and less tedious and costly appeals.

While announcing that the party regards the recall of judges as unnecessary the platform declares for such action as may simplify the removal from office of any judge who may be found derelict in his duties. It endorses the Taft universal peace idea and the settlement of international disputes peacefully and the referendum of all the controversies between nations to an international court of justice.

It declares against special privileges and monopoly and recommends amendments to the present anti-trust laws, defining criminal offences against the law and providing for the punishment of the violators.

Protective Tariff.

It recommends the creation of a federal trade commission for the administration and enforcement of federal laws governing interstate commerce and enterprises.

The platform reaffirms Republican belief in a protective tariff. It denounces the tariff for revenue idea as destructive to many industries. It recommends the reduction of some of the present import duties. The revision, the platform says, should be made in accordance with information obtained by an expert commission.

The Democratic party is condemned for refusing to provide funds to carry on the work of the present tariff commission. The Democratic tariff bills, passed by the present House of Representatives, are condemned as injurious to public credit and destructive of business enterprises.

There is a cost of living plank. It recommends a scientific inquiry into the causes which are operative both in the United States and elsewhere to increase the cost of living. When the exact facts are known the party pledges itself to enact legislation to remove these causes. A more elastic currency law is demanded.

The platform also asks for legislation which will give farmers better facilities for borrowing money easily and cheaply. It urges the establishment of agricultural credit societies and co-operative banks. It favors the creation of a Bureau of State and Federal laws for the establishment and supervision of organizations striving for their purpose the loaning of money to farmers.

The platform urges the passage of a law enabling the President to extend civil service so "far as practicable."

It favors the amendment of the Federal employes liability law so as to extend it to all government employes and to be more liberal in its compensation features.

Campaign Contributions.

The publicity of campaign contributions is indorsed.

It favors the establishment of a parcels post, postal rates to be graduated under a zone system in proportion to length of carriage.

It approves the action of the President and Congress in attempting to secure a treaty with Russia, as with other countries, recognizing the absolute right of expatriation. Right of asylum is declared to be a precious possession of the people of this nation, and must not be surrendered nor restricted.

It declares for the maintenance of an adequate navy and condemns the Democratic House of Representatives for refusing to authorize the building of battleships.

More generous laws for settlers on the government irrigation projects are recommended.

Liberal and systematic policy for river and harbor improvement is favored; also a liberal policy toward the development of Alaska and the leasing of coal lands.

Other planks recommended include:

Non-partisan government of the Philippines.

Laws providing relief against undesirable immigration.

Laws safeguarding of life at sea. This plank is obviously prompted by memories of the Titanic disaster.

"Republican accomplishments" are lauded, and the sixteen years of Republican rule by the late William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt and President Taft are declared impossible of "successful criticism."

"For two years I suffered from my stomach and nervous trouble. My digestive organs were entirely out of order and all the money that I spent for relief was thrown away. I read about Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, tried it, taking four doses a day, and, like a miracle, within a very short time my ailments disappeared. My nerves are now quiet and my stomach retains its food, and I am again in good condition. I recommend it to every sick person and will continue to do so."—Martin Wohlschiess, Neshamery P. # REPUBLICAN PARTY SAVED, SAYS TAFT

President Says People "Breathe Easier" Because Peril Is Averted.

A national convention of one of the great parties is ordinarily important only s a preliminary to a national campaign for the election of a President. The Chicago convention just ended is more than this, and is in itself the end of a pre-convention campaign presenting a crisis more threatening and issues more important than that of the election campaign which is to follow between the two great national parties.

The question here at stake was whether the Republican party was to change its attitude as the chief conservator in the nation of constitutional representative government, and was to weaken the constitutional guarantees of life, liberty and property and all other rights declared sacred in the Bill of Rights, by abandoning the principle of the absolute independence of the judiciary, essential to the maintenance of those rights.

The campaign carired on to seize the Republican party and make it the instrument of re/less ambition and the unsettling of the fudametal priciples of our government was so sudden and unexpected that time was not given clearly to show to the people and the party the dangers which confronted them.

It was sought to berak the wise and valuable tradition against giving more than two terms to any one man I the presidency and the danger from its breach could ot be measured.

The importance of the great victory which has been achieved can not be overestimated. All over this country patriotic people tonight are breathing more freely that a most serious menace to our Republican institutions has been averted by the action of the Chicago convention.

It is not necessary tonight to speak of result in Nivember nor of the issues which will arise between the Republican and Democratic parties in the presidential campaign to follow. It will be time enough to do that after the action of the Baltimore convention. It is enough now to say that whatever may happen in November a great victory for the Republican party and the people of the United States has already been won. The party remains as a great, powerful organization for carrying out its parriotic principles as an agency of real progress in the development of the nation along the constitutional lines upon which it was constructed and has ever been maintained; and its future opportunity for usefulness is as great as its achievements in the past.

TWO TROPHIES

ROOSEVELT LEADS THIRD PARTY FIGHT

Says Time Has Come for New Organization on Progressive Lines.

In accepting the nomination, Colonel Roosevelt said:

Gentlemen—I thank you for your nomination, and I know you recognize the lawfully elected delegates to the Republican convention who represent the overwhelming majority of the voters who took part in the Republican primaries prior to the convention, and who represent the wish of the majority of the lawfully elected members of the convention. I accept the nomination subject to but one condition.

This has now become a contest which cannot be settled merely along the old party lines. The principles that are at stake are as broad and as deep as the foundations of our democracy itself. They are in no sense sectional. They should appeal to all honest citizens, East and West and North and South. They should appeal to all right thinking men, whether Republicans or Democrats, without regard to their previous party affiliation.

I feel that the time has come when not only all men who believe in Progressive principles, but all men who believe in those elementary maxims of public and private morality which must underlie every form of successful free government should join in one movement. Therefore I ask you to o to your several homes to find out the sentiment of the people at home and then again come together, I suggest by mass convention, to nominate for the presidency a Progressive candidate on a Progressive platform, a candidate and a platform that will enable us to appeal to Northerner and Southerner, Easterner and Westerner, Republican and Democrat alike, in the name of our common citizenship.

If you wish me to make the fight I will make it even if only one State should supoprt me. The only condition I impose is that you shall feel entirely free when you come together to substitute any other man in my place if you deem it better for the movement, and in such case I will give him my heartiest support.

Wherever in any State the Republican party is true to the principles of its founders and is genuinely the party of justice and progress, I expect to see it come bodily into the new movement, for the convention that has just sat in this city is in no proper sense of the world a Republican convention at all. It does not represent the masses of the Republican party. It was organized in cynical defiance of their wishes and it has served the purpose only of a group of sinister political bosses who have not one shadow of sympathy with the spirit and purpose of the Republican party of fifty years ago and many of whom have used the party merely as an adjunct to money making, either for themselves or for the great crooked financial interests which they serve. The bosses who stole enough delegates to enable them to dominate this convention, and then did their will in it, have no kinship of soul or spirit with the men who started the Republican party on its career as an agent of liberty.

Appeals to North and South.

Imagine for yourselves how Messrs. Barnes and Penrose and Guggenheim would have looked standing under the historic oaks in that Michigan city where the Republican party was born fifty-six years ago. You, my friends, who are here before me, you are the heirs in the spirit of Abraham Lincoln when he refused to longer be bound by the shackles of the past and faced the new issues in the new spirit that the times demand.

But we are more fortunate in one respect than our predecessors. We who now stand for the Progressive cause, the Progressive movement, have done forever with all sectionalism, and we make our appeal equally to the sons of the men who fought under Grant and to the sons of the men who fought under Lee, for the cause we champion is as emphatically the cause of the South as it is the cause of the North.

I am in this fight for certain principles, and the first and most important of these goes back to Sinai and is embodied in the commandment "Thou shalt not steal." Thou shalt not steal a nomination. Thou shalt neither steal in politics nor in business. Thou shalt ot steal from the people the birthright of the people to rule themselves. I hold, in the language of the Kentucky court of appeals, that "Stealing is stealing." No people is wholly civilized where a distinction is drawn between stealing an office and stealing a purse. No truly honest man should be satisfied with an office to which title is not as valid as that of the homestead which shelters his family.

'COLONEL DEAD, BUT HE DOESN'T KNOW IT'

Elbert Hubbard Describes the Mighty Fall, but Thinks T. R. May Have a Kick Left.

By ELBERT HUBBARD.

CHICAGO, June 22.—Roosevelt is a dead one, but he doesn't know it, and the amount of panic a corpse can kick up through reflex action is unknown.

A week ago today the Colonel arrived, [illegible], glowering, glaring. A vast throng was at the station. All the [illegible] which means the unemployable—America's leisure class—jammed the approaches.

The [illegible] was lifted so high in the presence of the multitude, and, standing on an improvised platform of trunks, he waved [illegible] aloft and lifted up his hands for silence.

Of course [illegible] the thing he wanted.

Silence [illegible]. It comes to everything and will come to all of us, even the most strenuous.

So the swelling [illegible] after fifteen minutes of [illegible] exercise, lapsed into the cup of silence.

Something Did Happen.

And the great man spoke. No matter what he said—it was fighting language—something was going to happen, and that very much.

Everybody expected that every minute would be our next.

Then the kingly one catapulted over the backs of the crowd through the jam into an automobile, and every auto in the vicinity tooted its horn.

And so down Jackson boulevard, protected by helmeted police afoot and horseback, plain clothes men, detectives without number, the conquering hero came.

As Michigan avenue was cleared the crowd grew smaller and once within sight of the lake front there was ample space and breathing room.

The ex-king was rushed into the Congress Hotel, made a speech at the top of the stairway, and in a few moments appeared on the balcony to do the Juliet act for the ardent Romeoes waiting below.

Like a Circus Day at Home.

The newspapers very kindly referred to the crowd as a "vast throng."

It reminded me of Fourth of July in East Aurora, or the day when the circus comes to town.

From that time forward, [illegible] a little at a time, steadily, surely, slowly, without fail, the gas escaped.

Yesterday I stood at the entrance of the Congress Hotel and saw three men hastily emerge. That man in the centre was Theodore the First. He came a-running, that's the way he moves, pushing, jamming, crowding. Short sighted? Yes, certainly, very.

The giant colored man at the door had barely time to jump aside. An errand boy with a hatbox was tumbled as the three men hit the line hard and the hatbox went rolling across the sidewalk into the gutter.

An automobile was waiting. Many people were standing around. No one agitated the other. A curious silence prevailed.

The great man sprang into the automobile and as he did so, waved his hat in the air and lifted up his hands for silence.

The silence was there, all right. And then one of his lieutenants ordered the chauffeur to blow his horn. This was a signal for other automobiles in the neighborhood to do likewise. A feeble cheer was raised, started by the formidable, terrible Teddy himself. If others do not make a noise, he can be depended upon to start the applause.

LIVELY INCIDENTS IN FINAL SESSION

CHICAGO, June 22.—At 11.50 a Roosevelt demonstration started, the cheering being led by a man in the Indiana delegation. The California delegates rose to their feet yelling: "We want Teddy, we want Teddy."

Alice Roosevelt Longworth rose in her place in the gallery and waved her hat as the demonstration started. At the end of the first minute the applause was deafening.

The Taft men of Washington won out. Mississippi was quickly settled and Taft delegates seated in the fourth North Carolina, the third Oklahoma and the second Tennessee districts.

During a long wait for the Texas report to come Mrs. Elmer T. Harris, of Denver, was overcome by the excitement that had attended the session. She was sitting in the gallery with her husband and brother, Walter T. Wrenn, when she suddenly leaped to her feet.

A delegate cried: "More oil for the steam roller."

Mrs. Harris was much affected.

"Roosevelt is our candidate" she cried. "It is robbery."

There was a scene near the lady. Her husband and brother endeavored to calm her. Finally they bore her from the gallery.

Roosevelt Requests Inaction.

During an intermission the statement from Colonel Roosevelt appeared in which he requested his followers not to vote on any question that might in future come before the convention.

The convention was called to order at 1:39 and the report on the fifth Virginia district was read, seating both of the Taft delegates. The majority reports declared the Roosevelt delegates to have been absolutely without merit.

"Choo, Choo, Toot, Toot!" went the delegates.

The motion to adopt the report was speedily carried and Chairman Root said: "I would like to say"——

Texas Case Taken Up.

"The convention will receive the report of the credentials committee on the delegates-at-large from Teaxs," announced Mr. Root.

The report said that the sentiment in Texas was overwhelmingly in favor of President Taft.

"How about California?" yelled a delegate.

"Boo, hoo," chorused the other Roosevelt men.

"Throwing out the rotten boroughs" ran the report, "the State of Texas is very largely in favor of President Taft."

Then it charged that Cecil Lyon had made the negro issue dominant in the campaign and had said in the fight that it was a question whether the white man or the negro ruled in Texas.

Colonel Lyon charged that the disorder in the Texas convention in one county was deliberately made to produce a state of anarchy. On the other hand, the Taft delegates in Washington County kept the Roosevelt folks from getting to the hall where the meeting was held. In the Texas district cases he said that the contestants should be seated. In cases of the delegates-at-large the contests had been fully heard in the State of Texas and there determined.

Neither Taft nor Roosevelt, he said, had enough fairly seated delegates to control the convention. His report asked for the seating of all of the Roosevelt delegates.

Then the last big fight came on the question to lay upon the table a motion to substitute the minority report. It was carried by a viva voce vote.

Whistle Toots Again.

Then the tin whistle out in the delegations tooted again. The majority report was then taken up by districts and each of the contests was decided in favor of the Taft forces without a call of the roll.

There was a funny situation when the Eighteenth District was reached. The seating of the Roosevelt contestants was advocated and the shouting Rough Riders voted against their own men when the question was put. Taft men were seated in the 1st, 2d, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 9th, 11th, 14th and 16th Texas districts. At the conclusion of the last district of Texas the entire roll, as acted upon in detail, was seated as the permanent roll of the convention. The committee on permanent organization reported that the temporary organization be made permanent. Chairman Olmstead took the chair to put the question and the Roosevelt delegates proceeded to make a wild demonstration.

"Root, Root," jeered the non-insurgents.

"Roosevelt, Roosevelt," cried the Progressives. The demonstration lasted many minutes.

When the report of the Committee on Resolutions was called for former Vice-President Fairbanks was given an ovation as he stepped to the front of the platform.

The former Vice-President finished the platform reading at 4:18 o'clock. The minority report of the resolutions committee was presented by W. C. Owens of Wisconsin, who read the La Follette platform.

Attack on Money Trust.

The La Follette platform carried a bitter attack on the Money Trust. Under the plank on banking and currency it declares opposition to the Aldrich currency plan and continued:

"We pledge our candidates that under no circumstances shall the Federal government come to the aid of high finance, but shall support those banks that extend a genuine preference to strictly commercial, as against speculative, loans, and to the millions of real producers who depend on those banks."

HOW BAY STATE VOTE WAS MADE 20 TO 16

Roosevelt Men on Delegation Charge Steal Through Root's Ruling on Alternates.

CHICAGO, June 22.—The recorded vote of Massachusetts by the re-nomination of President Taft stands twenty to sixteen. The Roosevelt delegation openly charges a steal of two votes for Taft from the Roosevelt side and they name the suave and placid Elihu Root as the burglar. It happened this way:

The Massachusetts delegation, standing eighteen for Taft and eighteen for Roosevelt, had failed to organize before the convention. It had no chairman of a delegation to poll its vote, so the roll call of all thirty-six members began. True to agreement, the Roosevelt delegates-at-large all answered 'present but not voting.'

The poll showed eighteen votes for Taft and sixteen present but not voting.

Then came Elihu Root on the scene. He declared that if any alternates from Massachusetts were present they could vote and it was their duty, so that the thirty-six votes of Massachusetts could be recorded. The alternates of George W. Coleman, of Boston and Alvin G. Weeks of Fall River were right on the job. They were Benjamin H. Anthony of New Bedford and Ernest G. Adams of Worcester. They are both for Taft. They voted for Taft so Taft gained two in Massachusetts. Almost a riot was precipitated when Chairman Root ruled that alternates could vote to fill a State's allowance if a delegate absented himself or refused to vote.

Charles S. Baxter, Medford; George W. Coleman, Boston; Frederick Fosdick, Fitchburg; Professor Albert B. Hart, Cambridge; Octave A. Larivlere, Springfield; James H. Magenis, Boston; Arthur L. Nason, Haverhill; Arthur G. Weeks, Fall River; John M. Keyes, Concord; Frederick P. Glazier, Hudson; Herbert L. Chapman, Lowell; Dr. James R. Berwick, Methuen; Charles M. Cox, Melrose; Lynn M. Ranger, Lynn; Alfred Tewksbury, Winthrop; Loyal F. Jenkins, East Boston; Eldon B. Keith, Brickton; Warren A. Swift, Taunton.

First Woman Voter Is Proud Tells Nellie Bly About It

Her Only Wish Is That Susan B. Anthony Could Have Lived to See It.

By NELLIE BLY.

COLISEUM, Chicago, June 22—I just talked with Mrs. Florence C. Porter of California. She is the first woman to vote in a National Convention, therefore she is of world interest. From this time henceforth Mrs. Porter will always be introduced with a tag "The first woman, you know, who ever voted in a National Convention."

She is good to look at; becomingly plump with a fine, intelligent, attractive expression. She speaks well, expresses herself without hesitation, clearly and forcibly. She dresses well also; a black silk gown, modishly made, well fitted and becoming. She held her hat on her lap. It was straw, straight with narrow brim, the crown encircled by flowers of a blue tinge. Her eyes looked blue. They gaze straight and fearlessly. She has a good smile.

"How did you feel when you rose to make that historical vote," I asked.

"I had no fear," she smiled.

Voice Firm and Distinct.

"Your voice was firm, clear and distinct," I told her.

"I am glad," she said. "I felt no nervousness. My twenty years' experience in women's clubs has been a good training."

"What did you think?" I asked, "of the people who were listening to the result of your vote; of the fact that you were creating history?"

"I thought of Susan B. Anthony, and I wished it might have been her in my place," she said simply. "I recall once, Susan B. Anthony saying she hoped not to die until she heard a woman vote in a National Convention. If only that wish could have been gratified. I next thought I voted in her spirit."

"Have you children?" I inquired.

"Yes, three, two girls and a boy."

"And what did they say when you started for this convention?"

"When they put me on the train they said: 'Mother, this is the proudest day of our lives. Look, she added, 'I want you to read the telegram I have just received.' She handed it to me.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., June 22, 1912.—To Mrs. Florence C. Porter, Convention Hall, Chicago.

You have converted all the dyed-in-the-wool Roosevelt Democrats to women suffrage, keep on fighting for Teddy. M. W. Connolly, Lee Stone, Frank Chairman.

"Have the men delegates resented your presence?"

"No, they have been splendid, even those who are against woman's suffrage," was her enthusiastic answer.

Tells of New Party.

"It looks now as if Teddy will not be nominated," I suggested. "What then?"

"A new party at once, that is decided," she explained. "It will be a progressive party with progressive ideas. It will embrace woman's suffrage. The rights of women in all things will be carefully considered."

"Will you start this fall?"

"Yes at once, as as tatsic part in the coming election."

"Who will head your party?"

"Mr. Roosevelt, we hope."

"Will women run for offices next election in California?"

"No, that will come gradually. We will not ask for offices, we will give time for the opponents of women to become used to the change. Later on women will occupy any office a man may hold. Sex will not enter into it."

"And how does it feel to have the right to vote?"

"It was a dropping away of bonds," she said solemnly. "I felt free and equal, the first time."

MRS. FLORENCE PORTER.

ROOSEVELT BOUND TO RUN, INNES SAYS

Ward 10 Politician Returns from the Chicago Hot Bed With Latest Gossip.

Charles H. Innes of Ward 10, who returned from the Chicago convention yesterday, says Roosevelt is bound to run on a Progressive ticket and that the Colonel would sooner have Taft as an opponent on the machine ticket than any other candidate, as he feels he can whip him easier.

Mr. Innes volunteered the suggestion that the prevailing sentiment at the convention seemed to be that some other candidate would make a stronger run than either Taft or Roosevelt, and Charles is a rock-ribbed "stand-patter" at that.

"Charlie" is the first member of the Massachusetts political squad to come back from the Windy City. He was just a spectator, but right in the heart of the Taft aggregation. He bounced off the train yesterday noon at the South station with a Gladstone bag, a furled raincoat, a broad smile and a fund of interesting impressions about the big G. O. P. show.

"Roosevelt will certainly be a candidate on an independent ticket," said Innes, wiping the train dust from his brow. "He's bound to be and it will be a Progressive ticket. The Colonel is up against it hard out there. Simply a case of being throttled and tossed aside by the regulars.

"He was in a fury all the time, the fiercest kind of temper. Couldn't seem to control himself. Facts are that he and his cohorts were outgeneralled, outwitted and licked at every turn. The Taft brigade simply smothered them by anticipating every Roosevelt dodge.

"There was some counting strategy I can tell you. Crane was about the busiest man in Chicago, while Penrose, White and his telephone held tingled all night long, but he has done great work for the Taft boomers.

"That gag of getting a woman to outfist the huge Roosevelt portrait over the heads of the delegates, and changing the applause from Hadley to the Colonel, was the work of Manchester, who figured it all out in advance, and it had the desired effect. The Hadley avalanche had gained dangerous proportions, and it was up to the Roosevelt followers to stem the tide of his popularity.

A Maker's Surplus Stock of Bathing Suits

To Be Sacrificed Monday at These Ridiculous Prices

Perhaps you have hardly thought much about a Bathing Suit, the weather has been so unseasonable—and that's just the reason we can offer these for so little. The manufacturer had them all made up and they didn't move. He couldn't sell them. No one was thinking about bathing suits and there was no demand. So he quickly accepted our offer if we would close them all out, and we doubt if you will ever see such excellent values at so great a sacrifice. Certainly not this season.

AT $1.65—VALUES UP TO $3.00—Only 250 of these and they'll be gone before you get to the store Monday if you don't hurry, for they are a splendid quality of mohair. Attractive suits in navy and black, all sizes, 34 to 46 bust measure, prettily trimmed in various ways with soutache braid, in round and square neck effects. Bloomers are cut extra full and wide, and they are better values than ever before offered. Not a suit of equal value ever sold for less than $2.00 and from that up to $3.00. Choose if you're here in time, for..... $1.65

MRS. BOYNTON DECLARES SUIT "SPITE WORK"

MEMBERS DEFEND WIFE

Norfolk Downs Clergyman Says He Recognizes Result of Strife.

MRS. HELEN W. BOYNTON, one of the best known church workers in Woburn, whose husband has sued their pastor, Rev. William B. Ayers, for $25,000 for alleged alienation of affections, yesterday asserted her innocence and blamed jealous persons, who, she said, were guilty of spite work."

The wife asserted she had no doubt certain persons in the fashionable Park and Downs congregational Church at Norfolk Downs had become envious of her because of her position in the church. Mr. Ayers is pastor of this church.

Mr. Ayers said yesterday he recognized the legal step as part of a feud that had been brewing. He declared the first he knew of it was when a friend showed him a story in a newspaper yesterday.

"But I presume that if it is true," he said on, "I shall hear more of it later."

Defend Mrs. Boynton.

Members of the church said what has happened was no more than they expected, but all defended Mrs. Boynton. Most of them admitted the existence of cliques in the church, and thought the trouble had grown out of jealousies.

"I have been watching this thing for some time," said one prominent woman member. "I felt certain all along there would be trouble, and now it has come. It's a shame, too, for though I am not a friend of Mrs. Boynton, I know her quite well through the work which she has done in the church. I know she is absolutely guiltless.

"There are two factions in our church and I think the trouble can be laid to this. Some time ago there were troubles. As a result charges were preferred against Mr. Ayers, but nothing came of them, as he was able to disprove them in every way. I am sure he will be proved innocent in this case, too."

Since the suit was filed by Chester A. Boynton, husband of Mrs. Boynton, and himself formerly a leading worker in the church, Wollaston people have discussed little else. Mr. Boynton is the financial manager of a Boston department store, and is at present living at Revere.

The husband refused yesterday to discuss the suit. He said his lawyers had cautioned him not to divulge points on which he had based it.

His wife is a very attractive woman, about twenty-five years old. The couple were especially active in church work, and in raising funds for building the building just dedicated, the worshippers give great credit to Mr. Boynton.

Wife Blames Feud.

Mrs. Boynton was seen at her home at No. 138 Bromfield street, Wollaston.

"I was very much surprised to learn that Mr. Boynton had taken any such steps," said Mrs. Boynton, "for I see no reason why he should do such a thing. I am entirely innocent, and all of my friends know that I am. Really, I do not see why any person could wish to carry their spite work so far.

"I have been a member of the Rev. Ayers' church for some time and both Mr. Boynton and I, worked hard to assist in raising money to build the new church, which was dedicated only a short time ago. Through this work I was associated with Mr. Ayers more than some other members of the church, which was only natural. But there are other ladies who have been doing practically the same work and all of whom know just who is behind this suit.

"I am sorry to say that while the work for the church was going on numerous petty jealousies sprang up. They did not amount to much at first and I gave little attention to them, but after looking into the matter I can see that they have been carried into my home life.

James Knox Taylor, "National Architect," Secured for Tech

Graduate of M. I. T. in 1879, He Entered the Services of the Government in 1895.

Announcement was made at Tech yesterday by President Maclaurin that James Knox Taylor, who graduated from Tech in '79 and who is now supervising architect in the Treasury Department at Washington, is to become professor in the department of architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology this Fall. Mr. Taylor is the second government expert secured from Washington by President Maclaurin within the past month.

Two weeks ago President Maclaurin was successful in persuading the chief geologist of the United States Geological Survey to come to teach at Tech. The president then sought Mr. Taylor. A high tribute was paid Mr. Taylor by E. Clipston Sturgis, president of the Boston Society of Architects.

"It is due to Mr. Taylor that the character and design of the buildings erected by the Treasury Department have been very materially improved," said Mr. Sturgis yesterday.

"During his administration and with his hearty co-operation and support the Tarsney act was carried. Under its operation the Treasury Department has been enabled to have competitions selected for the more important buildings of the department."

Mr. Taylor was born in Knoxville, Ill., in 1857, and was educated in the St. Paul public schools and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 1877-79. He was in business in New York for three years, in St. Paul ten years and in Philadelphia three years. He entered the service of the government in 1895, became principal draughtsman, and in 1897 was appointed supervising architect of the Treasury Department.

HONOR GIRL DIES ON EVE OF GRADUATION

HER DIPLOMA ALL SIGNED

Schoolmates Who Played With Her Twenty Hours Before Shocked.

The joyous preparations of the seniors at the Woburn High school for their commencement exercises this week were halted abruptly yesterday and the joy turned to sorrow when the graduates learned that Gertrude Anna Clement, one of their number, had died suddenly at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert A. Clement, of Main street, Woburn.

Many of the senior girls wept when they heard the news. Few of them could believe it. Twenty-four hours before the young girl had been one of them eager as they were in the talk of graduation. Later in the day they learned Miss Clement had been taken ill less than twelve hours she was dead.

Miss Clement was regarded as one of the brightest pupils that ever attended the high school in Woburn, and was an honor pupil in her class. Recently she received an honorary membership in the Woburn Woman's Club for high scholarship, being one of the first to get that honor.

An Earnest Student.

Her friends last night recalled that she had studied hard during the session. She was an earnest and sincere student, and her record in the school was an enviable one. She ranked at the head of the class in both scholarship and deportment. It had been the same in all her years at the school.

A particularly sad feature of her illness was the fact that while she was dying, Mayor Murray of Woburn was signing the diplomas of the graduates here among them. About the same hour Principal Low of the High school received word that Miss Clement was one of those whose applications for admittance to the Lowell Normal school had been granted.

The death has cast a pall of sadness over the graduating class, who will get their diplomas next Wednesday night.

Prominent in "Woburnia."

Miss Clement was in her twentieth year. She was a prominent figure in the affairs of "Woburnia," the school city, and being unusually gifted as an extempore speaker she was active in the debates and proceedings which took place in that civic community. She was a member of the editorial staff of Alpha-Omega, the High School paper, having charge of the literary department.

Miss Clement was the youngest of a family of six children. She was earnest in church as well as school affairs, and was a prominent member of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the First Church, the members of which are united in grief with the bereaved family.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the parlor of the First Congregational Church. Rev. Stephen A. Norton officiating.

REVEAL ELOPEMENT.

Brockton Couple Disclose News of Their Wedding in Boston.

BROCKTON, June 22.—News leaked out today of the elopement and wedding in Boston of Allen W. Howard, son of County Commissioner J. B. Howard, to Miss Harriet E. Graham. The young couple told their parents first and then their friends about the romance of their love.

Howard and his bride eloped to Boston on Tuesday. It happened that the Rev. Alan Hudson, pastor of the First Church here, was in Boston. "We want to get married, Mr. Hudson," the couple told their pastor. "We have the license and are ready." They kept the marriage quiet until to-day.

The Burgoyne elm on Main street, Waltham, is to be removed because it is so old, it threatens to fall. General Burgoyne halted under the tree in his march from Saratoga to Cambridge in the Revolution. The Dorothy Brewer Chapter, D. A. R., of which Mrs. Ida Louise Gibbs, the patriotic writer, is a member, has succeeded in having the tree preserved until now, but the chapter no longer opposes its removal.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., June 22.—Four hundred and twenty thousand dollars has been realized by the United States government for the sale of old junk at the several naval stations on the Atlantic coast since May 3. The New York yard turned in $150,000, Norfolk $100,000, Boston $70,000, Portsmouth $80,000, Tompkinsville Lighthouse district $50,000.

BROOKS AND BRIDE HERE ON HONEYMOON

She Says Girls Out Should Consult Their Hearts When They Marry.

Frank A. Brooks and his [illegible] than a week, who was Miss [illegible] Newberry of Detroit, arrived [illegible] yesterday on their honeymoon. Mrs. Brooks is a daughter of [illegible] Newberry, formerly Secretary of the Navy, and her marriage to Mr. Brooks [illegible] after she had jilted Captain W[illegible] at the altar, has caused a [illegible] among her friends in Detroit. Was [illegible] New York.

At the Touraine last night, Mr. Brooks said: "We did not expect to be found here, although we made no particular [illegible] to secrete ourselves. We intend [illegible] with to appear in the limelight.

Cared for Someone Else

"I cancelled [illegible] any reason [illegible] I did not love Captain Alleyne. [illegible] the appointed date other than that I cared for someone else more and that someone else is, of course, my husband.

"I guess all of my friends know this and I need not say why any one else should be at a disadvantage. Well, perhaps it was not quite the ordinary thing to do, but then you know Detroit is a part of the West, at least I have always been taught so and Western girls feel they should marry the men they love and take the other matters into consideration later.

"Was this an exceptional romance? Well, I hardly know. Perhaps you might call it so. I am not telling what I think it was. I had known Mr. Brooks for a long time, quite a long time, and I had known the Captain a comparatively short time. I think that explains everything. I had known Mr. Brooks long enough to feel absolutely certain of how I felt and perhaps how he felt."

Brooks Just Smiles.

Mr. Brooks sipped his black coffee and smiled, but could think of nothing to add to his wife's remarks other than that he was very happy and contented, whether it was called a romance or by some other name.

Mr. Brooks had been a suitor of Miss Newberry for many months, but the mother did not approve of him.

She took her daughter to Bermuda for the season. It was then Miss Newberry and Captain Alleyne met. It was known she was an heiress and there were many who followed her. Captain Alleyne soon had the heart of the American girl—for the time being.

June 18 was set as the wedding date and on June 1 the Captain went to Detroit for the ceremony. He was entertained at the Country Club and many other places. The Newberry family had sent out 800 invitations. Suddenly Captain Alleyne left Detroit. No one knew where he had gone, nor why he went except the Newberry family.

This caused surprise and gossip, but it was calm compared to the sensation when it was announced Miss Newberry and Mr. Brooks had been married just twenty-four hours after the time set for the wedding of Captain Alleyne and the heiress. The invitations had been recalled and only two friends were present at the ceremony—Miss Marjorie Mellish and W. J. Gray, Jr.

LEADERS ASK BRYAN TO SUBORDINATE HIS PERSONAL FEELINGS

With Foss Speaker Believes the Only Questions Which the Convention Ought to Face Are the Issues at Stake, Such as the Tariff and the Selection of Candidates

Sentiment for Speaker Continues to Increase as the Delegates Arrive in Baltimore from Various Parts of the Country Ready for Opening Session on Tuesday morning

BALTIMORE, June 22.—The [illegible] are just beginning to gather in force for the Democratic National Convention. They have been coming in all the week in small groups, but today carloads are being dumped into Baltimore. The city is already showing its incapacity comfortably to absorb the throngs that will be here by Tuesday when the convention will open.

The hotel lobbies now are jammed and locomotion in them is uncomfortable. What the condition will be when the full strength of the shouting hosts are assembled can be imagined.

Champ Clark still looms big. His lines are showing neither break nor weakness. His followers are busy and confident.

Wilson's supporters are depressed. Their chief at this moment seems to have been hardest hit by the demand of William J. Bryan for the six progressive candidates to join him in opposing the election of Judge Alton B. Parker as temporary chairman than have any of the others. The reason is that others have met the Bryan demand openly and boldly.

Wilson Accused of Cowardice.

Wilson is reported to have replied to Bryan at Chicago that he has not made the reply public. For this the New Jersey candidate is being accused of cowardice and evasion.

Replying to the appeal of Mr. Bryan to oppose the selection of Judge Parker as temporary chairman of the Convention, the principal leaders of the party whom Mr. Bryan invited to take part in the attack have sent word that they are in favor of subordinating personal issues to the great principles that are at stake.

Then it is agreed that the fight will be carried to the convention floor and that it will start a few minutes after National Chairman Black calls the convention to order next Tuesday. Adherents of Judge Parker here say that the national committee has already been canvassed by them and that [illegible] Mr. Bryan as it did last Winter when an attempt was made to unseat J. M. Guffey of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Bryan declared his opposition to Judge Parker on the ground that he [illegible] and sent telegrams defining his views to Speaker Champ Clark, Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey, Governor Burke of North Dakota, Governor Eugene N. Foss of Massachusetts, Governor Baldwin of Connecticut and Mayor Gaynor of New York.

Gov. Foss Sends Prompt Reply.

Your telegram received. I believe the Democratic party is so fully committed to progressive principles that the adoption of a progressive platform and nomination of progressive candidates are absolutely certain. Upon tariff reduction, abolition of the [illegible] opoly and perfecting the agencies of popular government no party could stand more squarely on the coming election. I hope, therefore, that we shall subordinate all personal issues to these great questions of principle in the hopes that our party may [illegible] upon the eve of advantage it now has. The tariff overshadows everything else and must be dominant note in [illegible] and election. Therefore, I [illegible] hope to see all Democrats solidly united for downward tariff [illegible] first of all. We will win on that.

(Signed) EUGENE N. FOSS.

Should Prevent Discord.

Speaker Clark made this response:

Have consulted with committee having my interests in charge and agreed with them that the supreme consideration should be to prevent any discord in the convention.

Friends of mine on the sub-committee of arrangements have already presented the name of Hon. Ollie James to the sub-committee.

I believe that if all join in the interests of harmony in an appeal to the entire national committee to avoid controversies in matters of organization that the committee will so arrange as to leave the platform and nomination of candidates as the only real issues on which delegates need divide.

A copy of the telegram was shown to Judge Parker in Rochester, N. Y., where he was attending to some legal matters. He read it through carefully.

It is very interesting," he said at length. He scanned the names of the Governors to whom the message advocating the rejection of Judge Parker and the recommending as temporary chairman of some progressive acceptable to the leading progressive candidates for the Presidential nomination had been sent.

"It is very interesting," he repeated, "but I have no comment to offer. It has been my policy to remain silent for the past few months." He mentioned, however, that he planned to begin work at once on his address as temporary chairman.

Word from Colonel Watson.

Chairman Mack of the National Committee received a telegram from Henry Watterson, at Louisville, in which the latter said he opposed Judge Parker as temporary chairman, but added:

"What the Democrats at this time most need and require is the pooling of issues, not the raising of disturbances. I especially hope Mr. Bryan will use the force of this. Like yourself, I am his friend. I fear that if Mr. Bryan, thrice the nominee of the party for President, should begin by taking the floor to oppose Judge Parker, once its nominee, he will not only raise the Governor Simeon E. Baldwin of Connecticut wired from New Haven:

Replying to your telegram forwarded from Hartford, it does not seem to me that the course you suggest would promote harmony at Baltimore. The Republican party has been visibly destroying itself at Chicago. The storm-centre has been the action of its National Committee in planning for the organization of its convention. Cold Water from Marshall.

Governor Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana wired:

You may be right, but as Judge Parker as a member of the committee on resolutions from the State of New York at the National Convention at Denver helped to report our platform of 1908, and as he came to Indiana that year to advocate the election of Senator Kern, I do not see how his selection as temporary chairman will result in a repudiation of the platform of 1912. I am not a delegate to the convention and as the choice of the party in Indiana for the nomination of President I deem it inappropriate for me to attempt to dictate to the lawfully constituted party authority who shall or who shall not preside at the convention.

GOVERNOR WILSON TELEGRAPHS BRYAN HE IS WITH HIM

BALTIMORE, June 22.—Governor Wilson of New Jersey to-day telegraphed to William J. Bryan that [illegible] in opposing Parker for temporary chairman of the National Convention.

The Wilson reply was [illegible]:

OREGON FOR CLARK; TARIFF RECORD HAS WON THE PEOPLE

BALTIMORE, June 22.—M. A. Miller, Democratic National Committeeman from Oregon, has arrived. In his opinion the Democratic convention will make a mistake if it does not nominate Speaker Clark. The Oregon delegation is instructed for Wilson, but in the recent primaries Mr. Clark carried every county of the State outside of the city of Oregon, where no strenuous effort was made to get out the Clark vote.

"Mr. Clark's principle source of strength with the voters of Oregon," Mr. Miller said, "[illegible] record in Congress [illegible] a quarter of a [illegible] and [illegible] effectively [illegible] the vital principles [illegible] earth party [illegible] [illegible] Mr. Clark [illegible] before [illegible] and a resourceful captain. Oregon is for tariff reform, and Mr. Clark is the very personification of the movement for a lower and better tariff, which will distribute [illegible]. We admire his stand on the income tax proposition.

[illegible] Democrats [illegible] are men of integrity and force, but, in my opinion, none of them can boast of as many qualifications as Mr. Clark. A broad and discriminating observer, Mr. Clark has studied the multifarious problems of government from every [illegible]. He is sanely progressive and [illegible] and there is no [illegible]. Without descending to the arts by which a demagogue appeals to an audience, he nevertheless compels attention and wins sympathy."

Among the visitors convention week will be J. B. Foster of St. Louis. Mr. Foster is coming to be present when Speaker Clark is nominated. The Clark [illegible] interest to young Mr. Foster. In 1880 Mr. Foster's father introduced Champ Clark, then a school [illegible], to Miss Genevieve Bennett, who also was teaching school [illegible] after a short courtship on December 14, 1881, they were married. Mr. Clark has seen Miss Bennett at a social [illegible] and asked to be presented [illegible]. Young [illegible] will come to Baltimore at the special request of his father.

One of the hits of the cabaret show at the [illegible] this week is the presentation of the Champ Clark "Houn' Dog" song, by Maurice Levi and a little colored street urchin with a yellow hound, which he pulls across the stage by a bit of twine.

After the playing of the march of the Presidents, during which all the heroes of the nation are applauded, the stage becomes dark, and the pit is illuminated only by the candle lights at the tables. Accompanied by the sonorous sound of 'cello and drum music, the urchin makes his appearance with the yellow hound, chanting all the while the slogan of the Champ Clark camp. The audience applauds and the boy is showered with silver from the audience, but when a large picture of the Speaker is carried across the stage the audience goes wild.

Around the world in eight months is the record established by a papier mache "hound" just received at the Clark headquarters from San Domingo. That the [illegible] can be seen [illegible] its express tags.

A copy of the song and the dog, which has been briefly and affectionately named "Bauchamp," was sent to a friend in Boston, and the silent but expressive Clark delegate started on his journey.

From Boston the dog did Europe and the Far East, as the tags indicate. He [illegible] Vienna, Constantinople [illegible] Manila. From Manila he jumped back to London and was shifted to Peru, Ind., thence to Major-General O'Reilly in the Philippines, who delayed the trip two weeks before [illegible] to a naval colleague in [illegible].

WOMEN FROM WEST TO CAST 12 VOTES FOR CHAMP CLARK

WASHINGTON, June 22.—The twelve votes in the Democratic Convention at Baltimore from Colorado will be cast for Champ Clark by Mrs. A. R. Pilzer, sister-in-law of the Speaker, who is a regularly elected delegate. The Speaker married Mrs. Pilzer's sister.

Mrs. Pilzer, who is an educator and leader in woman movements in Colorado, arrived in Washington last night together with her daughter, who is also a voter. Speaking of her candidate, Mrs. Pilzer said:

"I did not work for and vote for Speaker Clark because he is my brother-in-law; but because I believe him to be an honest man. His record is an open book. He has been in Congress twenty years and done marvellous work for the entire country. He is a true friend of the people. I regard the Speaker's fight as already won because the sentiment for him is general throughout the country."

CLARK COULD CARRY N. Y., SAYS O'GORMAN

BALTIMORE, Md., June 22.—Governor Woodrow Wilson has instructed the delegates from his State to vote against Parker.

Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany leader, who on behalf of the New York State delegation, proposed Judge Parker as the temporary chairman of the convention, has announced through his confidential advisers that he will stick to his original selection until he is beaten in the convention.

The [illegible] Democratic National Committee if he persisted in forcing the name of Judge Parker. A poll of the National Committee members indicates that twenty-nine will oppose Parker and seventeen will vote for him. The other six members of the committee refuse to commit themselves.

It now seems that [illegible] Parker may be carried to the door of the convention, since Bryan's friends say that he probably will not face the situation before the National Committee at its session Monday to ratify the selection of Parker by the committee on arrangements. Leaders [illegible] at a report that Parker would step aside and permit Senator [illegible] to take his place as temporary chairman. It is shouted from the housetops of Democracy that Bryan will go down to defeat, though fighting every inch of the way.

There is no man in public life for whom I entertain a higher regard than I do for Speaker Clark," Senator O'Gorman said today. "He is a [illegible] organized orthodoxy and [illegible] and a vigorous and forceful expounder of historic Democratic doctrines. His availability as a candidate for the Presidency is conceded by all familiar with national politics. I have said publicly that I believe that Sepaker Clark could carry New York, and nothing has occurred recently to alter my opinion. Mr. Clark is popular with the elements [illegible] and I believe he would poll [illegible] Democratic vote in all parts of the country and gain recruits for the [illegible]. Mr. Clark is a man of [illegible] popular leadership and a speaker of singular force and effectiveness."

Ill health and his unhappy marriage to a Russian beauty from whom he was divorced several years ago, following her elopement with a Russian army officer, are thought to have caused the suicide.

SCORES CORPORATION FOES OF SUFERAGE

Alice Carpenter Assails Powers That Defeated Cause in New Hampshire.

Alice Carpenter of the Massachusetts Woman's Suffrage Association has made public a letter denouncing certain New Hampshire corporations for the part they took in the defeat of the woman's suffrage measure in the constitutional convention in that State.

The reason for the defeat of "Votes for Women," according to Miss Carpenter, lies ... the ... "The powers of darkness are always wiser in their day and generation than the powers of light."

The Amoskeag Mills, the Boston & Maine road and the Jones Brewery of Portsmouth are the concerns whose activity, according to Miss Carpenter, was responsible for the suffrage defeat.

"Women always scratch their ballot, which makes them unpopular with the railroads from a suffrage point of view," she says.

"Powers of Darkness."

Editor of the AMERICAN:

The Woman Suffrage Bill was lost in the New Hampshire convention by a vote of 206 to 149. To those close to the situation the reasons were obvious.

"The powers of darkness are always wiser in their day and generation than the powers of light."

We were fighting the Amoskeag Mills, the Boston & Maine Railroad and the Jones Brewery of Portsmouth. The Boston & Maine Railroad has controlled the New Hampshire State Legislature for many years, and did not, of course, wish a vote that would not fall in line with its tactics.

Women always scratch their ballot, which makes her unpopular with the railroads from a suffrage point of view. The Amoskeag Mills employ a large number of women, and it is not the policy of the management to confer power upon its employes. The ballot is a power that may be used effectively for self-protection, as has been proved in the case of the working man. The Jones Brewery followed the lead of similar institutions in other States. Women are so constituted they cannot be made to see it is to the interest of the home that our breweries should be maintained in a flourishing condition.

Antis' Fears Needless.

As for the gentle ladies who came from all parts of the State to testify that women do not want to vote, and to beg that they might be spared this additional responsibility—they did not affect the situation one iota. They never do. We were not fight, ... that type of individual in New Hampshire any more than we are in Massachusetts.

Their fears that motherhood and the deep instincts of home would be jeopardised by extending woman's influence in life, reminds one of a woman squealing at a mouse with a thief behind the door. I shoul dlike to refer those highly conscientious women to the reports of the American Society for Sanitary and Moral Prophylaxis, whose office is in 29 West Forty-second street, New York City. I think a little of the information of the great social evil which is attacking our homes and our race might make them sufficiently intelligent on this subject f suffrage is realize that woman needs the ballot for her own and her children's protection, whether she wants it or not.

Lost Opportunity.

The protection and conservation of life are her great responsibilities, and to say that she can achieve the necessary result by indirect methods is reducing the whole question to an absurdity. One might as well say that because dresses can be made by hand, sewing machines are unnecessary.

New Hampshire had a great opportunity, not only to recognize its women, but to form its progressive spirit. We were in good company in that reactionary convention, and the vote on the woman suffrage bill but emphasized the fact that New Hampshire needs a great awakening if she is to hold her own with the spirit of the times. Sincerely yours,

ALICE CARPENTER.

The Silver Bug

The silver bug, silver fish, bristle tail or fish moth is a destructive pest of some habits as the book worm, causing much trouble about houses, but is not often seen. It is from three-quarters of an inch in length and is of silvery gray color, appearing tapering or fish like form.

It loves darkness and concealment, and especially takes alarm and flies away in such an alarmed manner that it is difficult to detect where it disappears.

It destroys the labels on books, eating the starch paste used to fasten the labels on books and sometimes have thus been known to take away the value of a valuable book.

Manila envelopes, starched collars and cuffs, silk and woolen goods, especially if starch is mixed with them, are favorite articles of food for the insect. Carpets, furniture covers and the backs of specimens of leather have also been victims of them.

It is a good plan to pack books and papers closely together to keep these insects out, for they do not like to be disturbed and so they get better opportunity to get at them.

The best protection against their ravages is a can of Murdock's Liquid Fire Proofing, which can be applied upon the artwork by means of a small brush, and will not injure the most delicate fabric, as it is a clear liquid and will not stain any fabric or damage those pieces upon which it is applied.

Being odorless it can be used without offense to the nearest, sold by drug and department stores everywhere for 50c and 1.00. 5c and 10c extra by mail. Eleven different powders for other pests, name kind when ordering.

Handsomest Bachelor, Tallest, Shortest, Richest, All Own Up to Elizabeth Elliott

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

Boston over-run with bachelors? Absurd! That's what I thought the other day before I started out to make a canvass of that regular bachelor storehouse, City Hall, and I learned that Boston has most bachelors to the square foot than any city in the United States. And there are almost twice as many women in Boston as there are men! There may be an excuse for the women—they can console themselves with the fact that there are not enough men to go 'round—but what possible excuse can these bachelors have?

Boston is famed for its beautiful women I didn't know that until one of these unappreciative bachelors told me so. Well, at any rate, it appears that Mayor Fitzgerald is worried about these single men. He has volunteered to raise the salary of every employe at City Hall who will wake up and show some appreciation of his many blessings, or the many blessings (unclaimed cases) of Boston, and marry one of the aforesaid blessings before January 1, 1913. It's the truth that more than twenty-five per cent. of the men employed by the city are unmarried.

So I started out bright and early the other morning to see and talk with these men, and not to be personal or inquisitive, just to ask them why they weren't married, if they thought they ever would be, and if this generous offer of the Mayor's would spur them on.

Went to Ask 'Em Why Not.

But do you know, I don't believe it's a matter of money or anything of the kind.

The first place I went was to the office of Mr. Richard M. Walsh and Mr. Edward T. McGettrick—that was great, because both Mr. Walsh and Mr McGettrick acted as though they enjoyed it.

Mr. Walsh is the handsomest bachelor in Boston, I mean of those I've seen, and that's saying a good deal. I saw the tallest bachelor, the shortest one, the handsomest, the largest salaried, the homeliest, the most conceited, and the most hopeless one.

As for the handsomest one, I asked him if the mayors offer would be any inducement. He glanced at the picture of a beautiful girl hanging over his desk as he said, rather thoughtfully: "I don't know as any more inducements are necessary. So I imagine there'll be one salary at City Hall go up. But I knew the minute I saw him he wouldn't last long in the bachelor market.

"I think, though," he said, "that may be a little inducement to most of the fellows at that, and—" but he got no further, for Mr. McGettrick was interested himself by this time and his question, "How much is this raise to be?" interrupted the handsomest man.

"I'll have to see and consult with the Mayor before I decide definitely to take any steps in this matter," Mr. McGettrick declared, semi-seriously. "A fellow might get into it and find this much-talked-of raise didn't amount to much, then what?"

By the time I was through with this office my courage had risen and I went right on without a tremor to the office of Mr. Walter Finigan secretary of the music trustees and was introduced to what at first glance appeared as the shyest bachelor. Before I left I changed my mind and am still carrying around the medal for shyness. That may be the excuse of some bachelors, but certainly not those at City Hall.

Mr Finigan openly bemoans his fate. He declares he is not voluntarily a member of the bachelors' Club.

"If I should meet the right girl I don't suppose I'd remain a bachelor, regardless of the Mayor's offer," he explained. "Most of us are too busy to get married. We don't have time to go around and become acquainted with the girls we'd want to marry. If some of those young women would send around samples of their biscuits we might find time to eat them, and consider."

"Now that's really generous of him, isn't it? But I guess he is very generous any way and—if I could only make biscuit—

Mr. Finigan is twenty-eight years old, with a salary of $1,500 a year. He's a brother of ex-Alderman Fred Finigan, who also is a bachelor, and of Tom Finigan, another bachelor. Three in a family!

Mr. Finigan didn't seem so much impressed with the idea of the raise in salary. But he was terribly in earnest about the bachelors. So it behooves any girl who would like to marry him to be immediately introduced to the cook-book.

Mr. Andrew Kelley—he was my escort by the way—next took me to see Mr. William A. Leahy, the Mayor's secretary. Mr. Leahy took the matter quite seriously. It's forty-one years old and—well, perhaps it began to look serious to him. He receives a salary of $4,000 a year, so it isn't for that little prize the Mayor offers he's waiting.

When I asked him if the Mayor's offer would be any inducement to him he declared, "Not in the least, though I think so many it might be a great help. Many men have responsibilities of which the outside world knows nothing and really can't afford to marry and support a wife as they would want to support the girl they loved. But I think in many instances it's just because the man hasn't met the right girl that he isn't married. There are certainly many lovely girls in Boston and it isn't because the men lack appreciation for them that they don't marry them."

"Is it because the men are selfish?" I asked.

"No; because they are unselfish," he replied promptly, and he proceeded to argue his point. But then you may keep your own opinion just the same. He says he's married to the city.

The oldest bachelor is Billy Dunn of Charlestown, who for thirty-seven years has been a janitor at City Hall.

The best paid bachelor and the one for whom there is absolutely no excuse is Judge Joseph J. Corbett, head of the city Law Department—$9,000 a year is what he gets. He is the best paid bachelor employed by the city.

Attridge, He's Very Shy.

When I first saw Mr. Attridge—John J. Attridge, President of the City Council, I started looking for the modesty medal. He didn't get it. I can't recall now whether it was because I couldn't find it or because he didn't deserve it. Mr Attridge is chairman and receives from the city a salary of $1,500 a year. He also is the law partner of Sheriff John Quinn, another noted bachelor.

When the bachelor question was put to Mr. Attridge he declared: "I'm very shy, very timid. I go to a great many dances and social affairs, but unless I know a girl very well I don't even ask her to dance. I'm so much afraid of a refusal. Boston is noted for her beautiful women and there are heaps of mighty attractive girls, but it takes a lot of courage for a man to sell one to marry him."

But he's not timid, believe me.

"The pretty well taken care of as it is, I have four sisters and a good home what more could I want."

What's that but selfishness?

From him we went to the biggest bachelor—that doesn't mean the most hopeless, because it was Dr. Francis A. Mahoney. He's the nice, big, wholesome bachelor who makes each person feel right away he's just the one particular somebody the Doctor was wanting most to see. He has a wonderful voice, kindly blue eyes and a jolly hail and hist the nicest manner in the world. He might be considered a bachelor. I forgot to ask just how tall he is or how much he weighs, but he sure is big, and how he ever escaped is a mystery.

"The average girl of today," he said, "expects too much and the average man wants to give her just as much as she expects. He can't afford it and that's why there are so many bachelors. That rules the Mayor promises may help some if it's large enough." So every body hopes the salaries will be greatly increased, and all the bachelors of Boston get married. I'm tired of interviewing them.

Germany has shot ahead in the [illegible] twenty years [illegible]

Educators and [illegible] who have given [illegible] to this recognized fact [illegible]

This is a startling truth and must make all good Americans who are proud of their country stop to think.

Germany has industrial education for every boy and girl under sixteen years of age, and provides op[illegible] for apprentices up to eighteen.

Germany, therefore, fills her factories, her shops, her entire industries with skilled workmen, who are turning the raw materials from other countries into fine products for which there is a demand all over the world.

[illegible] would seem to be the very embodiment of the new idea now breaking over the industrial world. Not many trades are [illegible] are but pro lems in one form or another of the work done [illegible]

[illegible] employers who are looking for boys during the Summer would do well to employ some of these lads who have at least shown commendable ambition to get on.

The other new venture just closing for the season is even more unique and unusual for Boston than the Boys' Industrial School. It is the Girls' Part Time School in the North End where young women employed in candy factories attend for four hours a week, and are taught domestic science. The expense is borne, as is the [illegible] Boys' Industrial School [illegible]

This school has now been in existence long enough to have demonstrated many times over its value to young girls forced to seek wage earning positions. Miss Florence [illegible] principal of the school states that 170 girls have already been placed in positions with good wages this season. There will have passed through the school, at the end of the term about 500 girls.

BEULAH BINFORD IS NOW A HELLO GIRL

Not Yet 18, Girl Who Figured in Remarkable Crime Starts Anew on $10 a Week.

NEW YORK, June 22.—Beulah Binford, not yet 18, the central figure in the Beattie tragedy in Virginia, is in New York, "trying to be good on $10 a week."

Does it seem congruous that a character inured to ease and immorality should go plodding along like thousands of girls in New York in a shabby dress, contented with a flat yellow envelope at the end of the week?

Yet such is her resolution, declares Beulah Binford, the sweetheart of Beattie, who was put to death in the chair for the murder of his young wife on her account.

Whether this little girl will be able to work out the salvation she says she wants is a matter that time must prove. But those who see her now, busy from 8 in the morning until 6 at night without any of the luxuries she used to enjoy, earning $10 a week, must feel that at least there is a brave pathos in the attempt.

At present Beulah Binford is a telephone operator and office girl in an office on one of the side streets off Broadway. She has taken another name, and only her employers, who gave her the job out of pity, know who she is.

She attends to the switchboard, the filing of the correspondence, has charge of a card index system and goes on errands for the office. Sometimes she takes bundles weighing twenty and thirty pounds for delivery and puts in a day that would tax any one of her strength and experience.

Out of the $10 she receives for her work she pays $6 a week for her room and two meals and her lunches and carfare consume another $2.10. On the remaining $1.90 she has to perform the feats of high finance of dressing herself, buying clothes, incidentals and amusements. And remember, she is a young girl, fond, perhaps overfond, of pretty clothes.

"That's the worst part of it," she says, "to have to do without pretty clothes, for I do love them. I have only what I had when I came to New York, and these rags are getting threadbare.

"The [illegible] purple suit is well cut [illegible] the seams are pulled apart and [illegible] is badly worn.

"But I'm learning," she went on, smiling. "My hat I got in a sale for 50 cents, and I bought the pair of white wings for $1. Then I put them on at the noon hour myself, and one of the girls in the office said it looked almost as well as hers, for which she paid lots more."

HELD AFTER QUARREL.

WHIPPLE CALLS COST OF LIVING BIG ISSUE

Leading Boston Lawyer Urges the Democrats to Make Their Campaign on It.

When asked to say what in his opinion should be the issues which should dominate the platform laid before the coming National Democratic Convention at Baltimore, Sherman L. Whipple of the law firm of Whipple, Sears & Ogden, and a leader of the bar of New England, said today:

The really great and indeed paramount issue on which the impending campaign should be waged is the high cost of living. Prices of most of the necessities of life are higher today than at any time since the Civil War, and they are constantly rising. Our people are feeling the press and pinch therefrom, and the prevailing social and industrial unrest which is almost phenomenal is caused largely, if not wholly, by the fact that their slender wages and income are being used up in an unnecessarily high cost of living.

The initiative, the referendum and recall are all of them important issues. The doctrine of "equal opportunity for all" and "the rights of humanity over the rights of property" are important and interesting, but the question whether the people shall have their food untaxed, decent and comfortable homes in which to live, and the necessities of life free from the tribute to trusts, is the fundamental one which underlies all the other issues in the minds of the people.

"Trusts Protected"

The people are now recognizing the fact that the tariff operates as a protection, not for industry but for the trusts; and that the tariff utilized by the trusts is primarily and fundamentally responsible for high prices.

In my judgment the first useful public service of the Democratic party is to strip off from the trusts the protection of the tariff and make the food and necessities of life of the people free from taxation. The trusts have been built up by the special privileges they have enjoyed under the tariff. The only way to bring them into proper relations to the community is to deprive them of this protection. A splendid opportunity for public service of a high order is before the party in this campaign.

When once more the people shall have and the necessities of life at the cheapest possible price, and are enjoying their proper share of the country's prosperity, there will be plenty of time to take up and deal with other issues, which are largely those of political philosophy.

The question of the reduction of the high cost of living is not a party question. It is one which affects every citizen—unless it is to be said that there is a party which prefers to be robbed by unnecessarily high prices for the things they need.

Why They Like T. R.

In my judgment the party leaders ought not to permit their attention to be diverted from this issue. The managers of trusts and those profiting from the taxation of the people's food are delighted with those gentlemen who go about preaching these new and fashionable political doctrines. They are delighted with the doctrine of the recall of the judges. Most of them would like to have the judges recalled who have attempted to bring them under the law. They are quite in sympathy with all these political doctrines of the new nationalism so long as they can continue, under the protection of the tariff, to levy their unjust tribute from the people. The generous contributions of trust magnates to Mr. Roosevelt's campaign indicate their delight with his harmless doctrines and his practical neglect of the things which so vitally affect the people's prosperity.

The whole situation as to the tariff is vitally changed in the last decade. In former years an abnormally high tariff would so stimulate a particular industry that the domestic competition would often bring prices down to the foreign level.

Trusts were created to enable their promoters to take advantage of the full privilege of the government to tax the people by destroying domestic competition, and this has been so done in the last five years that the people can now find no relief from prices of their necessities which are practically extortionate.

I should go to the extent, at least, in revision of the tariff, of taking off the tariff from all food products, all the necessities of life, and the raw material of our manufactures.

Problem of Wealth.

In another aspect, the question is merely the problem of distribution of wealth in the country. For years the capitalist has been getting too much and the toiler too little in the distribution. Beside this, and in addition to his inadequate wages, the trusts are loading down upon the shoulders of labor the levy of the taxation which the tariff law permits, and the burden is crushing.

It is all very well for Mr. Roosevelt and other leaders to talk about the rights of humanity and about political philosophy. The time to deal with these questions is when the people are well fed, well clothed, and well housed at reasonable prices. People will interest themselves very little in political philosophy or new social doctrines while they are being robbed by an unjust tax.

In my judgment the first duty of Democrats at Baltimore is to pledge themselves to reduce the cost of living for the American people, and to that end, to destroy the tariff protected trusts and monopolies.

Agassiz Shaws Are Back Restored to Health

Wife's Devotion in Adirondacks Rewarded

MR. AND MRS. LOUIS AGASSIZ SHAW, WHO ARE WITH THEIR FRIENDS AGAIN.

With fondest love and wifely care
She nursed her husband back to health,
Remote from scenes and joy and wealth,
In Adirondacks healing air.

The society reporters on the Boston newspapers noted, in their accounts of the Country Club meet, which closed yesterday, that Mr. and Mrs. Louis Agassiz Shaw were among the race attendants.

More or less space was devoted, too, to Mrs. Shaw's gown, a "pannier of emerald green satin and white flowered chiffon," etc., etc.

But much more important than Mrs. Shaw's pannier gown of satin as smart and becoming as said creation undoubtedly was to the charming young matron, is the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Shaw were able to be here for the meet and particularly that Mr. Shaw himself was looking so "fit."

In the return of this engaging couple to the social whirl there is a story of a long, long Winter up in the Adirondacks, where young Mrs. Shaw, a brilliant society figure, was practically isolated with her husband and their baby girl till Mr Shaw was restored by mountain air and outdoor life to former health.

The sojourn of the Shaws at their camp up in the Adirondacks and the unremitting care that Mrs. Shaw gave her husband, add another pretty chapter to the romance which has interested Boston, both society and every-day people, ever since the engagement of Miss Joan Bird to Louis Agassiz Shaw was announced less than three years ago.

The fact that Mr. Shaw is one of the heirs to the $30,000,000 Shaw fortune, that his wife is an heiress, too, and that each is descended from two of the oldest families in New England, only adds high lights to the story.

A camp in the Adirondacks in the middle of the Winter is as "far from the madding crowd" as one could imagine for a society girl.

And Mrs. Shaw has been a society figure par excellence. More than that, she has been one of unusual activity, indulging in athletics, riding to hounds, keenly sought during her debutante days and identified with the fashionable gayeties of the younger set.

A swift and abrupt change this, from the city's pleasures and excitements to the loneliness and quiet of a mid-winter mountain camp.

But the Shaws gave up all social life and its varied distractions. Mrs. Shaw devoted herself to nursing her husband. Now their reward comes in the renewed health of Mr. Shaw, and their return to the city and its diversions, including a round of glad welcomes from friends on all sides.

Mrs. Shaw is the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird of "Endean" at East Walpole. She was a member of the 1908 Sewing Circle. [illegible] she joined the Vincent Club, as a matter of course. With her sister, Mrs. Robert P. Bass (Edith Bird), wife of the Governor of New Hampshire, she organized the famous Endean Beagles, a hunt club, composed of young women riders.

Married Two Years Ago.

She made her debut four years ago. She was married two years ago this month to Louis Agassiz Shaw at "Endean." The wedding was one of the most brilliant that Boston society ever had the privilege of attending.

Louis Agassiz Shaw is the son of the late Louis A. Shaw and of Mary Saltonstall Shaw (now Mrs. John S. Curtis). He is a nephew of the late Alexander Agassiz, the naturalist. Quincy A. Shaw, 2d, of Beverly Farms, is his brother. He is a member of the Somerset, Porcellian, Dedham Polo and other clubs.

The following year a baby girl was born at "Endean" and the happiness of the couple was complete.

A few months later came the illness of Mr. Shaw. The physician's order was an open-air life in a high-bracing climate even through the Winter if need be.

Mrs. Shaw immediately subordinated everything else to this emergency. With her husband and baby she went to an Adirondack camp, where she spent the Winter months in guarding her husband's health jealously, in addition to her maternal cares.

Attends Sister's Wedding.

Only once during the Winter did Mrs. Shaw emerge from their Summer seclusion and participate in a society function of any kind. That one occasion was the wedding of her sister to Governor Bass on January 20 at "Endean."

Mr. Shaw was then too ill to accompany his wife. Mrs. Shaw would not have left his side for any call less urgent than the bridal of her own sister, who was bridesmaid at the Bird-Shaw wedding two years before.

After her sister's wedding Mrs. Shaw hastened back to her husband and resumed her unremitting guardianship of his health. It was by her coming to "Endean" at that time and by her husband's absence that society really learned how retired a life the couple were living up in the mountains.

Now the long vigil is ended and Mrs. Shaw has her reward in the restoration of her husband to health. Also they are able to return to their wonted associations in and about Boston. Their appearance at the Country Club meet was the [illegible] therefore, for heartiest congratulations to both.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaw and the [illegible] are now at Beverly Farms, looking forward to a delightful Summer with their [illegible] and friends and to deserved enjoyment of the social pleasures to which their wealth and position make them eligible.

12,000 SEE CLOSING COUNTRY CLUB RACE

King Pin Carries Off the Honors in the Annual Brookline Events.

More than 12,000 people witnessed the races at the Brookline Country Club yesterday afternoon. The day was ideal. Several of the races were close and not until the wire had been crossed was the exact winner known. The feature event of the afternoon was the Country Club Grand Annual Steeplechase, over a two and one-half mile course.

Algie, owned by Mr. McMurtrie, was a favorite and her defeat by Windfield S. Kelton's King Pin was a big surprise. Algie, who started off well, pulled up lame and finished third. The record for the course was broken by several seconds.

The only accident of a serious nature occurred during the second round of the race. L. Navarre, owned and ridden by Charles K. Harrison, Jr., had just passed Algie, before reaching the water jump. The course was crowded at the point by society people. As Kingpin, Algie, The Trader and Navarre came tearing down the course for the second last jump, Navarre pulled ahead into third place.

Navarre in the Air.

Approaching the water jump some of the horses lagged. The pace was telling on them. Navarre went into the air. There was a report like a revolver. Navarre had struck one of the bars. Harrison was thrown headlong ten feet.

As he was rolling over, his horse ran directly over him, kicking him in the hip. Other horses came tearing along. The crowd gasped, but Harrison kept on rolling and a police sergeant pulled him out of the course. He was taken to the club house, where it was found he was suffering from several bruises of the back and head and hip.

Several other riders were thrown but were uninjured. One of the surprises of the grand steeplechase was the defeat of Algie, owned by Mr. McMurtrie, picked as first choice. She struck one of the [illegible] and pulled up lame. The record for the Country Club course was broken in this race by King Pin. The time was 4 minutes 2 2-5 seconds. The old time was over [illegible] minutes.

About twenty five or thirty bookies were in the circle and more than 200 men were placing bets on the favorites. Although there were plain clothes men [illegible] and Pinkerton detectives, no arrests were made and none of the names of the [illegible] were taken. Even the society people [illegible] several bets in the Club Steeplechase.

FASHION AS USUAL LEADS ATTRACTION AT COUNTRY CLUB

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

When the Country Club races are mentioned visions of beautifully gowned women immediately arise and all the very latest of Dame Fashion's caprices are paraded before admiring eyes. But yesterday was the exception and "brilliancy" would hardly be the proper adjective to use in describing the final day of the meet.

Comparatively, there was but a smattering of society, and for the most part the gowns worn were the same as those seen on the first day.

It was of hand painted white chiffon, with bodice and pannier of brightest emerald green. Her hat was a small Turkish turban affair trimmed with green of the same shade, and she wore green shoes and carried a green parasol. She was accompanied by her handsome young husband who has just returned from the mountains and they were entertaining a party of his men friends.

Miss Sears Hostess.

The ever-present Eleonora Sears, who of late spends so little of her time in Boston, entertained several of her friends in her well-placed box and was distinguished by the severity and sombreness of her toilette. She wore a plain black suit, the skirt exceedingly short, a black waist and a black hat trimmed with black. The sombreness was relieved only by a touch of white about the neck.

The Washington B. Thomas box was, as usual, the centre of much interest. Mrs. Thomas, who is one of the most regal of society matrons, entertained a large party of her daughter Margaret's guests at luncheon, and later chaperoned them in the box. She wore a gown of Delft blue satin and chiffon and a black hat trimmed with black and white plumes.

Miss Margaret Thomas, handsomer than ever, and as usual surrounded by a trail of admirers, held court throughout the afternoon. She wore a most becoming gown of white satin with coat effect of orange chiffon, a large white hat faced with black velvet and trimmed with white plumes.

Miss Simpkins Guest

Mrs. Samuel D. Warren, who before her marriage was Helen Thomas, was in dark blue satin with small black hat trimmed with small wreath of vari-colored roses.

Miss Faith Simpkins, who has only recently recovered from the effects of an operation for appendicitis, was a guest in the Thomas box and looked prettier than ever in her gown of white lace trimmed with coral and a large black hat trimmed with white.

AMERICAN WITH A HOE IS GOING TO BE A BIGGER MAN THAN A POLITICIAN

By W. H. ROSS.

STATE STREET, June 22. Countries are like individuals—they have periods of troubles. This country has passed through a long stress of bad business and now when fundamental conditions appear much brighter, a presidential campaign afflicts the nation and men who are leaders in finance and trade think they must stand pat until they know what kind of a national administration there is likely to be for four years beginning in March next. All the talk about extending the presidential term to six years is based upon a desire to put off the quadrennial period of uncertainty for half as long again.

W. H. ROSS

STOCK TRADING STAGNANT.

Ever since there has been such a thing as government it has affected trade, and never more so than at present. It has frequently been said recently that the American people were paying [illegible] attention to politics than ever in their [illegible] tory. That statement is not substantiated by proceedings in the biggest securities market in the country during the week which ends today. Wall Street practically stopped dealing in stocks to watch the Chicago convention. After it became apparent that Colonel Roosevelt would not be the nominee there was a slight increase in the total transactions for one session, but the next day, when the convention situation looked more sanguinary, trading slackened again.

Reports from all exchanges revealed a disinclination on the part of those men who have anything to lose to assume any more risks [illegible] them. [illegible] country [illegible] way there is [illegible] and it is [illegible] takes [illegible] activity. [illegible] wait [illegible] know who is to be [illegible] of the White House [illegible] are going to be [illegible] more bount[illegible]

Crops of Most Importance.

The result of the harvesting [illegible] beyond doubt of [illegible] result of the [illegible] more disposition to take [illegible] crops than on the [illegible] the political pa[illegible] has shown its govern[illegible] he most conservative [illegible] harder to get any ext[illegible] on through Congress [illegible] White House than to dig a Panama.

For years past there [illegible] amount of talk about the [illegible] tendencies of the times. If [illegible] suffered from [illegible] has [illegible] grasped [illegible] action by the British Parliament [illegible] two years [illegible] has been known [illegible] country since the constitutional period of the American republic, when [illegible] citizens were given [illegible] privileges which their white neighbors conservatively [illegible] lated away from the [illegible] and educational [illegible] Not a progressive [illegible] in America [illegible] British Parliament [illegible] He [illegible] privileges [illegible] view the rise of radicals with less concern than Wall Street men whose fathers or grandsires worked at trades or followed the plough. If the Republican party has become infected with radicalism the Democratic one appears afflicted to an equal extent by what is euphoniously termed conservatism by those who favor it, but is less politely characterized by members of that party who don't.

There are members of both parties who think there should be a [illegible] usually requires a famine and [illegible] misery which goes with actual starvation or a great moral crisis to stamp a [illegible] in any country. As the American people are well fed, well housed and well clothed at present, and not moved by the sense of any great wrong to be righted [illegible] prospects of their immediate [illegible] any new standard [illegible]

Why Market Was Firm.

Comment [illegible] been [illegible] strength of the stock market during the convention week and the inference [illegible] been drawn that business is less affected now than ever by presidential [illegible] ing. Inasmuch as there [illegible] been [illegible] to speak of around stock exchanges [illegible] those who haunt them vocationally it is hard to see how there could have been much of a price [illegible] Professional traders and controlling interests [illegible] no customers [illegible] too well versed in [illegible] to try to unload on each other mere[illegible] one else around [illegible] Bear drives have been sorties in which [illegible] was made in seeking cover [illegible] making the onslaught.

Many market observers expect to see an advance in security prices as soon as the conventions are [illegible] and perhaps as soon as Republicans name their man. It is acknowledged by almost everybody whose opinion has weight that the market is technically strong. There is a very limited supply of stocks for sale and efforts [illegible] liquidation have not even made [illegible] the general situation. When [illegible] has improved to the point where a [illegible] people have made considerable [illegible] their various lines of trades as they did [illegible] boom decade which ended with 1907 there will be a demand for stocks which will provide a real live, pulsating market.

A more [illegible] as far as the welfare of [illegible] people is concerned, than any which [illegible] at present discussing is how the masses are to be fed in the future. The country must [illegible] in [illegible] food [illegible] than farm [illegible] the inhabitants of the United States to have big crops grown [illegible] than to have either party or any candidate succeed at the polls.

If some of our [illegible] knew as much about [illegible] as they do about politics [illegible] country would be better off [illegible] would be in a far worse [illegible] the trusts owned [illegible] and [illegible] controlling most of the [illegible]

The man with the [illegible] is an American who has a bright future if he will only stick to it [illegible] learning how to scratch every [illegible] ble out of the ground. The agricultural colleges are institutions of great consequence in this era, and if city youths who wish to prosper would take the [illegible] them, and leave to the country boys who want to be where the wheels go round and pictures move, the hazardous privilege of embarking in the so-called learned professions, the swap might work well for awhile.

To show they spurned the Stars and Stripes, which were frequently referred to in the Dominion during the [illegible] of last Fall as the Yankee [illegible] to demonstrate their loyalty to [illegible] which is at present disinclined to invest any more money in their country [illegible] tians refused to reciprocate with us and thereby deprived themselves from further benefits of the best market in the world. The [illegible] was unpleasant for American [illegible] this country needs free access [illegible] great and growing agricultural [illegible] the North. However, reciprocity [illegible]

[illegible] have found the Americans good [illegible] neighbors and like to have [illegible] come over the border and settle. If this sort of migration keeps up there will be so many ex-Yankees in the Dominion that they may entertain "old home" feelings [illegible] of some day casting a [illegible] in favor of free and unrestricted trade between the land of their birth and the one of their adoption. Anyhow they [illegible] more welcome in the Canadian [illegible] with money to buy farms than [illegible] men exiled from England to [illegible] the family peace of mind.

TAFT AND THE CROPS PLEASE WALL STREET

Financiers Decide President Isn't so Bad; Money in "Trust Busting."

By THOMAS C. SHOTWELL.

NEW YORK, June 22.—Wall Street's joy over Roosevelt's success in committing political hari-kari was tempered today by the fear that a radical might be named for Vice-President. The Street takes it for granted that the Democrats will spend the week at Baltimore handling the situation in their usual patriotic manner. Bankers began today to plan for the future with Taft in the White House and they suddenly discovered that Taft was not so bad after all.

Taft and the crops are satisfactory to the financial world. The Street also began to wonder why eminent stock market plunderers should be so determined in their support of Roosevelt.

Taft means dissolution suits and that is what Wall Street wants. There is more money in setting them up and knocking them down and setting them up and knocking them down over and over again than in letting them stay set up. If the Street cannot have big waves, it will have enough little waves to give more action than the big ones. Big organizations under control of the government would mean safe investments for the people, but many little ones will do the same work and give more money to Wall Street.

The movement of British American Tobacco today to 2[illegible] was proof of the value of "trust busting." The Sherman anti-trust law has no terrors for Wall Street.

Stocks in general were heavy today but the trading was on such a light scale that the net changes meant nothing. Industrial alcohol and distillers were higher. The big stocks, like Reading, Steel, Union Pacific, Lehigh, Can and the coppers were quiet but firm. Silver advanced to sixty-two cents an ounce, a new high record.

Cotton and grain were easier. Aside from the advance of British American Tobacco nothing of importance was done on the curb market.

Americans Settling Canada.

OTTAWA, June 22. Thirteen hundred citizens of the United States migrated into Western Canada during May and took up free homesteads from the Dominion government. They came from thirty-eight States. In all the immigration from the States during that month amounted to [illegible] 21,000 and it is estimated that the total of the money the Americans brought with them was not far from $25,000,000. Many of them did not take up homestead claims but bought land outright.

POLITICS THE BANE

Judge Gary of the Steel Corporation Talks on Business Situation.

CHICAGO, June 22.—Politics is now the bane of the United States, according to Judge Gary of the United States Steel Corporation, and he says but for this kind of a restriction this country would lead the world.

"We need," he said, "a material uplift as well as moral. Suppose some country were to discover in its domains gold mines yielding a billion dollars a year for a hundred years. We would at once conclude that country to be the wealthiest in the world. Yet here we (the United States) are yielding grains worth from eight to nine billion dollars yearly indefinitely. Moreover, our business methods are a mode for all the world.

"Every European nation tries to copy our commercial system. And yet we are constantly in trouble. Why? The answer is obvious to every well-balanced observer. Too much politics. With less political upon more mental serenity we could easily lead the world."

PRINT CLOTHS SELL BETTER.

More Activity Is Reported in the Fall River Market.

FALL RIVER, June 22.—The increase in the demand for print cloths, which began last week, has continued through this one, but the volume of sales has decreased some. One check upon buying was a general advance in the prices asked for narrow goods. Narrow styles have had the most call and printers have been the chief bidders. But business in wide goods has been fair. Of the total sales of 250,000 pieces 80,000 were spots, and most deliveries on sales ahead will be in July, August and September. October delivery selling has been moderate, but the contracts to run to the end of the year are few and small.

The trading has been very largely in odd counts of goods of print cloth yarn construction, some goods of standard styles being sold. Curtailment this week by the cloth mills amounted to 70,000 pieces.

AFTER MONEY, NOT HOMES.

Americans Who Emigrate to Canada Can Be Spared.

SEATTLE, June 22.—When American immigration to Canada was discussed at the Northwest Development Congress most of the speakers blamed the method of administration of public lands for retarding development in the Northwest, but C. L. Smith of Salem, Ore., took a more optimistic view.

"I am not worrying about Americans who go to Canada," said Mr. Smith. "They are not the men who make homes on the land, and it is the homemaker that we want. The men who are going across the border intend to stay only long enough to make some money and then move on. We don't need them in the Northwest."

Brokers' Views

F. L. Milliken & Co.—Until the disturbing factor of politics begins to work toward some solution, it seems doubtful if security prices can maintain any substantial upward movement. Once candidates and issues are named, the great underlying factors of good crops and improving business should make themselves felt.

Hunt, Ellis & Co.—Until the cloud lifts from the political horizon we look to see present conditions maintained—a generally firm tone with light trading. With politics generally relegated to the background as a market factor, an increasing amount of attention is being given to the crops. Here too, the situation gives little cause for apprehension. Notwithstanding that the [illegible] wheat crop is now estimated at 628,000,000 bushels, with the exception of last year the [illegible] since 1904 there is good prospect of the country producing in point of value, a record yield of agricultural products.

Hayden, Stone & Co.—Depending on the crops more than on any other one factor, the general outlook would seem to be for a heavy business at advancing prices, and as this prospect becomes more confirmed it would seem as though the stock market should respond accordingly.

Wiggin & Elwell.—The principal feature of the market is the persistent strength that seems to be in evidence most of the time. Whenever the market recedes dullness seems to increase, showing a desire on the part of the market to advance. We believe stocks should be bought on recessions.

TELEPHONE TESTS COMING.

United Telephone Co. Proposes to Demonstrate Instruments.

It is understood that important developments in regard to the instruments controlled by the United Telephone Company will soon take place. Tests of its transmitter are said to have shown it to be superior to those in ordinary use, and a striking commercial demonstration of the value of its repeaters is promised soon.

In fact claims made by this company regarding its devices have aroused interest not only in telephone circles but on the part of persons outside of them who have heard of previous tests. The company has a strong directorate and among directors who reside in Boston or its immediate vicinity are Mayor Hatfield of Newton, James P. Munroe, president and treasurer of the Munroe Felt and Paper Company; Walter Jeaney, vice-president and director of the Jenney Manufacturing Company; James M. Head, vice-president of the Warren Brothers Company; Frank F. Lamson, vice-president of the American Mason Safety Tread Company; Frank L. Locke, president of the Young Men's Christian Union, and John W. Long.

POLITICS BLAMED FOR STAGNANT BUSINESS

Financial and Industrial Leaders Are Eager to Start a Revival.

By B. C. FORBES.

NEW YORK, June 22. Sentiment is booming more than business. With the abatement of political warfare, activity may catch up. For the present hesitancy prevails in most directions. A spirit of impatience with restrictive influences is growing. Financial and industrial leaders are anxious to go ahead. They have held themselves and their organizations back long enough. Preparations for progress and expansion have been completed.

Everybody is waiting for somebody to give the word "Go." J. P. Morgan could probably, by one sentence, start a business boom. The situation is largely psychological. Meanwhile, the Stock Exchange moves indecisively with, however, the trend in favor of the optimistic operators. They are men of considerable calibre but not of the character that commands general banking confidence. The [illegible] are staying out of Wall street. Even investors are not present in large numbers. Bonds consequently are neglected. The prompt placing of certain important bond and short-term note issues by influential underwriters reflects a well supplied money market rather than a keen demand for investments.

The distribution of $250,000,000 during July in the form of dividends on stocks and interest on bonds should infuse some life into security markets. It should be added, however, that the dullness has been due less to a lack of funds than to absence of inclination to buy.

A tour of the banking district at the close of the week elicited that quite a number of financiers had quietly slipped off to Chicago. Neither their departure from New York nor their arrival in Chicago was chronicled in the press, this being in accordance with their wishes.

Love of Roosevelt Bogus.

Wall Street's loudly advertised love [illegible] Theodore Roosevelt was [illegible] bogus. The plain truth is that certain interests—not many—fearing that the ex-President would sweep everything into his net, deemed it politic to give assurances of friendliness, yet at heart they regarded him with no more favor than before. The defeat of Mr. Roosevelt early in the week was therefore cordially received by the majority of financial people, though a few alarmed over the world-wide uprising of the so-called common people, feel that the election of this avowed champion of the downtrodden would have acted as a safety valve.

Until the political pot ceases to boil so sputteringly until both sides have closed their convention doors, it were futile to expect a general forward movement by the strongest capitalistic groups. But July may bring symptoms of the coming revival. It is possible that nothing decisive will be attempted until after November 4, although this is not probable. Business, big business as well as little business, is chafing to stride out without further dilly-dallying.

Most conditions are ripening for genuine prosperity. The crops are now doing better, and despite the lateness of the season the 1912 harvest may yet outweigh those of any previous year. The word "outweigh" is used intentionally for the reason that an abundance of wheat, corn, oats, hay, cotton, etc., is far more important than a new high record in value would be. What we need is quantity, not prohibitive prices.

Railroad Profits Are Slim.

The farmer this season could afford to sell his products at prices less burdensome upon the people at large than those which have ruled for the last two or three years. The city dwellers have had a harder time than their rural brethren, so that a readjustment of conditions would benefit the nation. Bounteous crops would relieve many of our economic ills. And at this moment at least high hopes are permissible.

Railroad earnings while reflecting fairly heavy traffic, are not wholly satisfactory. Profits are too slim to permit of the expansions, improvements and equipment purchases that extensive crops and animated trade may call for several months hence. The Interstate Commerce Commission continues to cut rates here, there and everywhere, and the power of the Commerce Court to interfere has been emasculated by the Supreme Court.

The iron and steel boom is still raging. Copper is keeping these metals company, quotations having soared to within a fraction of 18 cents per pound. Electric appliances are in very keen inquiry, an encouraging sign. The warmer weather has hastened retail purchases of clothing, shoes, hats, etc., and has imparted cheerfulness to other lines of merchandise. Manufacturers are obliged to exert themselves to fill orders, since surplus stocks had been allowed to dwindle to almost zero.

U. S. Smelting Earnings.

The Boston News Bureau understands that the United States Smelting, Refining and Mining Company is today making close to the largest, if not the very largest earnings in its history. "We understand," it says, "that for the six months' period to end of the 30th of this month profits will be over $2,700,000, or an average of $450,000 a month. From the above net profits there will be an appropriation of $500,000 for depreciation, improvements and betterments, leaving available for dividends $2,200,000."

Advices from Adventure.

Gay and Sturgis say that private wire advances from Houghton state, both east and west Adventure drifts on No. 3 lode continues in good copper, and that a substantial stockpile is accumulating. The positions of Nos. 1, 2 and 3 lodes are said to closely conform to positions indicated by diamond drilling, and that the showing is pronounced most encouraging.

Advance in Copper Shares.

When the Boston market Stock Exchange closed on Friday last twenty of the copper issues dealt in this market averaged 54.48 in price, the highest average since March 24, 1910. The average closing price then was 56.30, although copper metal was quoted on that day at only 12⅝ cents a pound. On Friday last it was selling at 17¾.

Swift Plant at Toronto.

OTTAWA, June 22. The Swift Canadian Co. will be the first packing concern to make soap in the Dominion. It will build a big plant in Toronto for using new abbattoir fats in this way.

Porto Rican Sugar Crop.

NEW YORK, June 22.—The sugar crop of Porto Rico for this year is now estimated at 350,000 tons, which is about the 1911 total. The yield of irrigated lands has been twice that of the non-irrigated.

BROKER'S LOT HERE BETTER THAN ABROAD

Conditions on Continental Bourses Give Governments Wide Powers.

By BOERSIANER.

CHICAGO, June 22.—On Friday of last week there was a report in financiers' domains that the English government would at length take steps to check the record-breaking decline in consols; reported that half of the large treasury surplus would be applied to the redemption of the "current debt."

BOERSIANER

This means that the Chancellor of the Exchequer thinks of stopping the slump by buying the government's own securities, or doing what some corporations do here to rally their values on the Stock Exchange.

Simultaneously the French government took quite a different measure to check a depreciation in rentes. Somebody had put in circulation a rumor of the assassination of the commander-in-chief of the French army in Morocco. The nervousness on change was increased because the news agencies issued neither an official confirmation nor a denial. The French government ran down the report and pronounced it false.

Rentes recovered. But the government did not let the matter rest there. It decided to hold an inquiry with a view to prosecuting the person or persons who put the rumor on wings. Commissioners of police were sent to the Stock Exchange to find out the names of customers who sold rentes on the day the raid was made. If the culprit or culprits is detected will mean expulsion from the Bourse and probably a prison term.

Difference in Customs.

Lombard street, London, also had heard more or less alarming rumors regarding the cause of the fall of consols, but the government has not been punitive. The difference between continental custom and that of England and America is thus illustrated. It is a difference however that is rooted in the character of the stock exchanges. In England, as well as in America, the Bourse is a purely voluntary association free from government supervision. On the continent all the governments have supervisory power.

The sixty odd regular members of the Paris bourse are amenable to the minister of finance. They have certain privileges which the "coulisse," or inferior members do not enjoy. They have, for example, the absolute monopoly of handling government bonds and the securities of the railroads controlled by the government. Their membership is limited. But there are times when the French ministry may forbid the short sale of not only French consols but the bonds of any foreign government. During the Russo-Japanese War the short selling of Russian bonds was prohibited.

In Germany, or more accurately, in Prussia the same inhibition may be exercised by the finance minister. A chancellor, indeed has gone farther. When diplomatic relations have been strained he has notified leading bankers not to lend money to the country which happened to be on an uneasy footing with Germany.

Furthermore, the German government passed a compulsive law whereby everybody who made a deal on the exchanges must register his name publicly. This was done with a view of curtailing speculation.

Russian Laws Rigid.

These, however, are mild restrictions compared with some of the rules governing the St. Petersburg exchange. No man who is not in good standing with the Greek Church may be a member of the exchange, which of course excludes Jews and Lutherans, of which there are millions in Russia. The government may any time prohibit not only short selling in governments, but may stop trading—buying or selling—in any security.

In view of these conditions on the continent the lot of an English or American stock broker is comparatively a happy one.

General Electric Is Busy.

It is estimated that gross sales of the General Electric Company are running at the rate of $78,000,000 per annum as against about $69,000,000 in 1911 and $71,000,000 in 1910, which was its banner year. That net earnings will increase in proportion is expected, although copper is selling above 17 cents per pound as the company bought 9,000,000 pounds of electrolytic at 16 cents per pound in May for June, July and August shipment.

Price of Copper Metal.

NEW YORK, June 22.—While most of the largest selling concerns are holding firm for 17¾ cents a pound for electrolytic copper for domestic delivery, it is reported that the price is being slightly shaded in some quarters and that the metal can be obtained in some quantities at 17.60 cents. It is expected that June exports will total 60,000,000 pounds.

Sign of Better Business.

CHICAGO, June 22.—One report which is taken as a sign that general business is improving is increased in sales by Sears, Roebuck & Co. in the first half of June. They are said to have shown an increase of 13¼ per cent. over those for the same peroid last year.

May Pay 200 Per Cent. Dividend.

It is believed that if the United Cigar Stores Company directors decide to increase the capital stock of that corporation to $30,000,000 and to pay a 200 per cent dividend that the entire $10,000,000 capital of the newly formed United Stores Realty & Land Company will be retained in the treasury.

May Be Seaboard President.

BALTIMORE, June 22.—It is understood that J. C. Stuart of the Erie Railroad declined to leave it to be Seaboard Air Line president, and now there is talk of electing Vice-President Capps of the latter road as its chief executive.

Car Orders Decrease.

There has been a decrease in placing car and locomotive orders this month. Up to June 15 orders for cars totalled about 3,500 and those for locomotives about 100.

Morgan an "L" Stockholder.

Among the largest New York holders of Boston Elevated road stock is J. Pierpont Morgan, it is stated. He is credited with 350 shares.

WHEAT PRICES ARE FAVORING THE BEARS

Receipts Less, and Sensational Loss in World's Visible Supply Is Possible.

By JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO, June 22.—An irregular and unsettled market in wheat with prices favoring the bears and declines shown for the period, characterized the week.

While some improvement in hard Winter wheat crop conditions is very probable, past records show that such conditions as a whole, nine times in ten suffer additional deterioration during June when the April condition is around 80 per cent. as it was this year; a low April condition and a sharp loss during May, usually prevents improvement of the crop during June.

Daily Shipments Are Heavier.

Receipts continue smaller. Daily shipments are much heavier than last year, and milling requirements undoubtedly are also greater, hence heavy weekly decreases of stocks at visible supply points must be expected.

Opinions from abroad seem to be largely influenced by changes in American prices and the quantity on weekly world's shipments to supply import necessities.

Weekly export clearances have been and undoubtedly will continue insufficient, and the loss in the world's available supplies by August 1 promises to be startling. Present conditions could easily cause sensationally high wheat prices should deterioration of the world's crop develop anywhere.

Acreage Large, Condition Low.

Latest crop reports on corn seem to warrant the expectation that the government crop report on July 1 will indicate a large acreage but low condition because of poor stand and a lack of warm growing weather. Present advices indicate very small farm reserves, depleted country elevator holdings, a growing cash demand, active competition for country offerings and considerable anxiety over crop conditions.

It is current gossip at Chicago that recent sales and shipments have practically disposed of Chicago's entire stock of cash oats and that future shipments by country dealers will continue unseasonably light. There seems every reason to put excessive premiums for cash oats over the July harvest.

CAPE COD CANAL HAILED AS BOON TO NEW ENGLAND SHIPPING

Enlarging of Canal to Meet Navy's Needs Is Urged as Means of Protecting Nation.

By HARRY C. THOMAS.

THE new maritime highway, the Cape Cod canal from Sagamore on Cape Cod Bay through Buzzards Bay, will open next Spring according to Commodore J. W. Miller, vice president of the Cape Cod Construction Company. This announcement, made with the reservation as to the exact date, will be hailed with joy by the mariners who for years have "felt" their way across the treacherous Nantucket shoals and oftentimes finding themselves the unwilling guests of some life saving station along the Cape.

It means a boon to the seafaring men as well as a boom for the industries of the commonwealth and the Cape Cod residents have already begun to talk of a boom along their shores with the advent of manufacturing interests.

The canal puts Boston the next door neighbor to New York. It brings this city sixty-six miles nearer and that is a whole lot when competition is keen.

The building of the canal affects shipping from Canada to the farthest ports of South America. The chief benefits will be felt, however, by vessels plying between New York and Boston on either the outside or the inside courses, between Boston and Southern ports; Halifax to New York or Southern ports; Portland and other Maine cities to New York or further South, Jacksonville, Savannah, Norfolk, Baltimore and Philadelphia to New England ports. With these things in mind, it is to be little wondered at that the eyes of commercial men just at this time are centred on Cape Cod, that "right arm" of the old Bay State which the canal diggers are trying to amputate.

Rejoice Over Canal.

Cape Cod folks and every citizen of this country are rejoicing over the near completion of an inland waterway that will prove a boon to the seafaring men and a boom for the commercial interests of the Commonwealth.

Just what will have been accomplished when this canal is opened can be stated as follows:

Work actually began in January, 1910, on the Scussett marshes about a half a mile from the shores of Cape Cod Bay. The canal is seven miles long across the Cape and five miles of this has been dredging. The canal strip is 500 to 100 dredging. The canal strip is 500 to 1,000 feet wide at the bottom and 250 feet wide at the surface. The estimated cost of construction of the canal is $10,000,000 and it has taken three years to complete it.

The distance from New York to Boston via the canal is 279 miles as against 342 miles by the outside route or around the Cape and over the shoals.

The canal will be one of the greatest safeguards to shipping that the New England coast has ever had. Humanity demanded and always has some sort of safety for the mariners that had to make the dangerous storms and fog bound route around the Cape. The loss of life and property ... The United States government is spending thousands of dollars every year in the equipping and maintenance of life-saving stations all along the Cape coast.

The records, more or less incomplete, from 1843 to 1903, gives a minimum of 2,131 vessels wrecked in the Nantucket Shoals region; 908 of which were total losses. Ten complete crews disappeared with their ships and in addition 700 of New England fishermen and sailors lost their lives.

One important factor in the building of the canal which is bound to enter into it sooner or later is the United States government. According to August Belmont, who heads the syndicate building the canal, the present canal with its depth of twenty five feet will not be practicable for use by the government. Unless the United States deepens the canal nine feet and makes it 100 feet wider, it will be useless for the big ships of the navy. The canal is not being dug through desolate sand dunes, but when completed will be one of the most picturesque places in America.

Government Interested.

Mr. Belmont is again the authority for the statement that in time of war a fleet at Provincetown and one in Long Island Sound could not get together in time to prevent being wiped out by a foreign navy unless the canal is dug deeper. It is known that the Navy Department and some of its best engineers have the matter under consideration and have been down to watch the building of this canal on several occasions.

From a practical navigation point of view the canal should be more perfect than any at home or abroad. The traffic today passing through Vineyard Sound is 25,000,000 tons per annum. The canal will save seventy miles of distance between Nova Scotia and our South Atlantic coast ports. It will shorten the average trip two days in time, lessen insurance rates and diminish fog dangers 40 per cent. Vessels will be able to make about fifteen more trips per annum.

Computing the known ... [illegible] ... such as coal, of which there are 11,000,000 tons carried past Cape Cod each year.

More Canals Some Day.

The Cape Cod enterprise will be one of a series ... from Maine to the Gulf of Mexico and the first to be constructed through private capital. ... its relations to government ... canals will present many problems of vital importance. It is ... that the United States is not ... will not be slow to make the outlay necessary to deepen the ... rivers and sounds of the Atlantic coast.

Those that ... show a profit can easily obtain ... aid. Those that prove ... indirect local benefit will be ... by the States. Those that will ... commerce must come under the jurisdiction of the General Government. The Cape Cod, ... Panama Canals are types of ... All will have an interdependence, the one upon the other.

Questions of jurisdiction over created, ... or altered navigable waters ... operation and management ... to ... with due respect to ... ship and to charters ... to local, national and ... distances, to ... Provincetown and Narragansett Bay are the strategic bases for Boston and New York. Detached ships and squadrons must, in some critical war moment be able to unite, as a fleet, with the utmost celerity. Therefore the time now consumed in the 160 miles from Point Judith through the outside fog-bound passage in the presence of an enemy, from Newport or New York should be reduced.

With the canal deepened to forty feet, and the East River dredged from the navy yard to Rikers Island, communication through east and west in land protected channels is assured.

Shortens Long Route.

A glance at a chart will show the large protecting power, both in time and distance, over present battleship routes, by making use of Long Island Sound and the Buzzards Bay route for the defence of five States and our most populous Eastern cities.

The near completion of the canal makes serious study of this subject imperative, especially since the agitation for the improvement of the future Pollock Rip channel. Money spent there will be wasted. It should be applied to the outlying channels and breakwaters of the canal. This course has been followed in similar cases at less desirable existing ports, a notable instance is the so-called "Harbor of Refuge," at Point Judith. Maximum benefits to navigation will thus ensue from a minimum outlay on the part of Congress.

Today five hundred thousand passengers and twenty five million tons of traffic round the Cape per annum.

Saving of Time.

MISS FOLEY IN THE RING.

Suffragette to Crack Whip at Society Circus of Malden K. of C.

At last the Suffragette has come into her own. Miss Margaret Foley, once the political nightmare of Louis Frothingham, will wield her whip in earnest, next Wednesday evening.

For the past two months the membership of Santa Maria Council K. of C., of Malden, have been working hard to make their society circus one of the biggest events in the history of Malden. Their plans are now complete. The dates are June 26, 27, 28 and 29.

The committee has secured the grounds at the corner of Main and Centre streets, one block from Malden Square.

For a grandstand the committee has secured the services of Mayor Fitzgerald, Mayor Farrell of Malden, ex-Representative Bliss of Malden and Miss Margaret Foley, the celebrated Suffragette leader. The committee is in communication with Thomas W. Lawson, who is now in Chicago at the Republican convention. If it is possible for him to be in Boston in time for the circus Mr. Lawson will accept the invitation.

In the sideshow the various freaks will be duly introduced by Judge Riley, Representative Keating of Everett, and other men whom their friends will be pleased to hear and see. One of the big features will be a monster street parade on Wednesday, the opening night. It will leave the show grounds at 6.30, and parade the street for an hour, headed by the Letter Carriers' Band of Boston.

The executive committee comprises: Grand Knight John H. Cosgrove, Walter M. Healey, Robert J. Gallagher, Owen C. Trainor, Cornelius J. Monihan, John H. Rooney, Lawrence H. Spillane, Joseph A. Connelly, Charles Gingras, Patrick J. Kenney and Bernard D. Donahue.

Mrs. Pope Fights for Her Boy

Woman's Smoking Defended

MRS. POPE AND SON WHOSE CUSTODY SHE SEEKS

"Common Among Many Refined Women," Declares Referee Leslie.

NEW YORK, June 24.—When the proceedings over the custody of eight-year-old Richard Thorne of Mt Vernon are resumed this week it is expected that Mrs. Sybilla Thorne Pope, the mother, will testify and that she may be asked regarding her alleged habit of smoking cigarettes.

Attorney Warren Leslie, who is sitting as Supreme Court referee at the hearings, has ruled, however, that feminine smoking is customary "among refined women," in cities at least.

The inference from the referee's ruling is that smoking is not a blot on wifehood. The question came up as follows:

Richard Van Wyck Thorne, a rich real estate operator, was divorced by his wife, Sybilla, who received the custody of the lad. She subsequently married Clifford H. Pope, cotton broker. Then she put the boy in her mother's care in Mt. Vernon. Thorne moved to Mt. Vernon and persuaded his former wife's mother to take the boy and make their home with him. Now he seeks legal custody of the lad, while Mrs. Pope says he has influenced the boy against her.

At the last hearing Thorne's attorney brought out the fact that Mrs. Pope smokes cigarettes.

"Ah," said T. J. McManus, attorney for Mrs. Pope, "isn't it true, Mr. Thorne, that you ordered your wife to smoke cigarettes? Didn't you tell her that you and she would be more like chums if she enjoyed her smoke with you?"

"I did not," replied Thorne.

"Well, you know that the practice of smoking is no longer considered objectionable among women of refinement?" pursued McManus.

"I could hardly say that," retorted Thorne.

"Yes."

The referee then interrupted to say,

"I will take official cognizance of the fact that it is quite a common custom among many refined women in the larger cities of the world to smoke cigarettes.

SMOKING PROPER IN SOCIETY? HEAR BOSTON LAWYERS

Commenting on the decision of Attorney Warren Leslie, acting as Supreme Court referee in New York, in taking official notice of the fact that it is not extraordinary for society women to smoke in large cities, leading Boston attorneys are in accord with the referee's decision.

The case in point is the proceedings brought by Richard Van Wyck Thorne, a wealthy real estate operator to regain the custody of his son, Richard, a handsome boy of eight.

Sherman L. Whipple, of the firm of Whipple, Sears and Ogden, one of the leading lawyers of the Massachusetts Bar, said:

"I can't say very much about it. It is all a matter of personal habit, choice and taste. Personally I very much regret the prevalence of the habit. I think it ought to be discouraged, but I do not see how any court could say it was immoral. It is quite within the legal rights of women, if she wants to do it."

John D. Long, former Governor of Massachusetts and former Secretary of the Navy, said:

"I should not think it was sufficient cause for divorce."

PHILADELPHIA, June 22.—Several shore resorts in the neighborhood of Philadelphia are preparing to make a bid for the National convention of the Roosevelt followers, if these decide later to organize a new party. One or two places have already arranged to give the use of a suitable convention hall, free of charge, and to pay all the expenses of the delegates.

Thousands of Flowers Sold in Aid of Hospital.

Yesterday was Carnation Day in Chelsea and almost every person on the street wore one of the flowers. Not only were white carnations sold, as on Mothers' Day but all colors were in evidence. The proceeds will go to the Frost Hospital. Fifty women dressed in white sold flowers and all reported last night that they had done a tremendous business.

The workers included the twenty-three members of the Ladies' Aid Association of the hospital, of which Mrs. Ruth F. McClintock is chairman, and members of their families and friends. The sale began at 6 a. m. and every section in the city was covered. The consignment of carnations included over seven thousand flowers. Practically all of these were disposed of before 6 o'clock last night.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY HEALTHIEST IN U. S.

Conclusion Reached by Health Officer Based on Physicians' Reports

LOS ANGELES, June 22.—Los Angeles County is the healthiest section of its area and population in the United States, if not in the world. This was established yesterday to the satisfaction of Dr. E. O. Sawyer, county health officer, upon compiling physicians' reports for last month.

There were but seventeen cases of communicable diseases, none of a serious nature. This striking record promises to be outstripped by that for June. But four cases have been reported so far.

"Investigation of the cases reported," said Dr. Sawyer, "proves conclusively that of them are among persons who have been in the county but a short time. This indicates that Los Angeles county itself is practically free from elements of a contagious or infectious nature."

Start Fire Inquiry.

The third fire in the building numbered 788 to 790 Washington street, resulted in an investigation, but no cause was found. Several firms on the third and fourth floors sustained losses which will amount to about $1,500.

BIG CROWD SEES TWO LIVES SAVED IN LAKE

Canoeist at Webster Quickly Comes to Rescue When Craft Overturns.

WEBSTER, June 22.—James Farrell, nineteen of Lake street, and John Vinton, twenty-three, of Pressey street, narrowly escaped drowning this afternoon at Webster lake, when their canoe capsized a few feet from Beacon Park Wharf. Neither of the young men could swim. Farrell was seated in the bow of the canoe when Vinton started to push it from the wharf. Vinton had one foot on the edge of the wharf and was working the canoe away when suddenly it capsized.

Charles Chandler, who was in a canoe near by, rushed to the rescue of the young men. Farrell had gone down twice and as he came up Cassidy grabbed him and held him until help came. Vinton went down once and then grabbed the keel of the capsized canoe.

About a thousand persons who attended a performance at the Rustic Theatre witnessed the accident. Many women in the audience screamed.

Greek Letter Girls Call Babies Climax

CHICAGO, June 22.—A girl cannot be a complete Gamma Phi Beta, at least not in the estimation of the members of that sorority at Northwestern University, unless she marries and has children. The ideas of "girl bachelorhood" and "race suicide" are not tolerated. Here is the official list of the given stages in the life of a real Gamma Phi Beta:

2—The sophomore.
3—The junior.
4—The senior.
5—The engaged girl.
6—The wife.
7—The Gamma Phi mother.

The intolerance felt by the Chicago chapter toward spinsterhood and race suicide was made plain at the annual dinner, given at the Hotel La Salle.

The stages of a Gamma Phi girl's proper life were given on the program, and one member spoke about each of the seven stages.

Two Train Men Killed.

SCHEDULE OF WORK IN BABY HYGIENE

Plans Announced by Organization Trying to Save Children's Lives.

The following schedule of work is announced for the Child Hygiene division of the Board of Health and the Milk and Baby Hygiene Association in the summer's crusade to reduce infant mortality.

Each child hygiene nurse of the Board of Health to be assigned to a definite district.

Each such nurse to visit the homes of all new-born babies as soon as possible after notice of birth is received.

The nurse to ascertain by one or more visits, as may be necessary, whether the baby will be nursed by its mother during the early months of life. If so, she is to limit her work to general advice to the mother and distribution of literature.

If the baby is to be bottle-fed, and the family has no private physician, the nurse is to refer the mother to the milk station in that district.

BOSTON IN A GAME FIGHT WITH GIANTS

Pilgrims Close to Leaders All the Time in the Second Game.

Johnny McGraw tck away two more baseball games yesterday afternoon, his hired men scoring no less than 31 runs during the pastime, while the Pilgrims tagged along with a mere 17. Ten thousand "fans" considered their money well spent in watching 48 runs scored, and they had a race for what they paid when the Pilgrims almost caught the Giants, and actually had Johnny McGraw scared in the final session.

It required 67 hits—many of them for extra bases—and 15 errors, besides some bases on balls to provide this afternoon's amusement. Eight pitchers performed for the entertainment of the multitude.

New York won the first scramble, 17 to 5, and just squeezed through the second time, 14 to 12.

The first contest proceeded along in the ordinary course of events, with the Giants out in front by a 5 to 2 score, until the seventh inning, when Walter B. Dickson's aeroplane having arrived at the arena, Walter stepped in and sailed away into the clouds. Into the empty box strolled "Buster" Brown, but the Giants were tagging each other around the bases in the meantime, and they used up all the space on the score board for their ten runs.

Nearly Won Second Game.

Christy Mathewson was the hero of the encounter. He made the Pilgrims work for the few runs they made. He was a bit generous in the eighth—immediately after the massacre, and Boston tallied three runs. But the game was packed away when that incident occurred.

The second combat was jogging along merrily for five innings, with the score 5 to 3 their way, when everybody seemed to discover where the ball lay at once, and everybody began to clout it. At the end of the sixth it was New York's game, 8 to 6; at the end of the seventh, 11 to 10, and at the wind-up, 14 to 12. So the "fans" had a show for their money.

George Tyler started to work for us in the second struggle, but he began to lose his hold on the game in the fifth, and two innings later was happy to be relieved, Donnelly strolling into his place. McGraw thought he had the game in hand until the Pilgrims began a batfest in the sixth, so McGraw speedily removed Otis Crandall and called forth Wiltse, his lanky left-hander. Wiltse worked very well for a little while, but it was very, very little, and "Red" Ames had to rescue him. Ames himself would likely have gone to their repair shop, but baseball games are mercifully limited to nine innings each, and "time" at the end of the ninth saved Ames' "bacon."

Crowd Roared at Brennan.

Umpire Brennan was a good fellow yesterday, after the few kind remarks made by the newspapers and the "fans" about his work in this series. But the "fans" paid their respects to him twice when he was on the verge of being relieved from active duty himself.

With two on bases and two out in the fifth session, Ben Houser struck out. Being angered at his own downfall he hurled his club in the air. It missed Brennan's brain repository by an inch, whereat the

A. S. GUSHEE INJURED AT DORCHESTER RACES

Sulkies Lock Wheels, Gushee Being Thrown Heavily to Ground; 8 Races on Card.

A. S. Gushee, chairman of the racing and speedway committee of the Dorchester Driving Club, met with a severe accident at the Franklin Field speedway yesterday afternoon at the local club's matinee races. Mr. Gushee, with his star pacing gelding, Manila Boy, was matched against M. P. Gallup's Earl King, and A. T. Wheelock's fast Charley King with Fred Eldridge driving. Earl King took the first heat of the race with Manila Boy a close second, and Charlie King third.

At the start of the second heat of the race there was considerable scoring between the horses for position. All three came to the starter's stand almost abreast, Gushee driving Manilla Moy fast. He tried to get between Earl King and Charley King, but the space was too small, and his sulky locked with that of Charley King, Mr. Gushee being thrown to the ground and picked up unconscious by some spectators. He was brought into the starter's stand, where he was attended by a doctor, who found that he had a bad scalp wound and a discolored eye.

Manila Boy raced up the track at a fast clip finding himself free, men and boys rushing on to the track to stop him before he went to Talbot avenue, where there was a large crowd of people. He was finally stopped by a citizen and on being examined was found to be not injured.

Mr. Gushee was ordered to go home by the doctor, but refused and with his head swobbed in bandges drove his horse the remaining two heats. The crowd cheered him greatly for the nerve he displayed and after the race was surrounded by the spectators who cheered him lusterly.

The summary:

Class A, mixed—Charles King, blk.g. (A. T. Wheelock), first; Earl King, b.g. (M. P. Gallup), second; Manila Boy, b.g. (A. S. Gushee), third. Time, 1.03, 1.02 [illegible], no time on last heat.

3,000 WATCH RACES AT FRANKLIN FIELD

M'Vicar Is the Individual Star, Winning 1,500-Metre and Mile Races.

Three thousand enthusiastic lovers of athletics witnessed the track and field events held in conjunction with the dedication of the new quarter-mile [illegible] track at Franklin Field yesterday afternoon. The meet was a thrilling affair from start to finish. The [illegible] showed up to good advantage and the big crowd was kept on edge throughout the greater part of the afternoon.

Bill McVicar, the sturdy long-distance runner of the North Dorchester A. A., was the star of the meet. This clever performer breasted the tape a winner in both the one-mile and the 1,500-metre races.

McVicar had to extend himself to the limit in order to win the 1,500-metre event. He was pressed to the tape by Gaylord Goldsmith, who battled under the colors of the Acme A. A. of Jamaica Plain. McVicar beat Goldsmith to the tape by a scant yard, in 4m. 14 3-5s. This was one of the best races of the day. Goldsmith also finished second to McVicar in the one-mile race.

Bill Meanix, the former English High School star, who ran for Legate [illegible] last season, also carried off his share of the [illegible] honors. Meanix won first place in both the 120 and 200 yard hurdle events. He also captured third place in the shot put.

Irving Howe, the dusky colored flyer proved too fast for the field in the 100 metre event. Howe breasted the tape in triumph in 11 2-5s. Second place went to R. McClellan of the Dorchester Club, while Daniel Coakley brought up the rear of the procession.

The spectators witnessed some great sport in the running high jump. First place was captured by J. A. McDonald of the Dorchester Club, who cleared the bar at 6 feet. G. Pellitier got second prize with a leap of 5 feet 10½ inches. The other events were closely contested.

Boston Pennant Chasers Make It Five Straight from the Yankees, by Winning a Double Header at New York

Red Sox Have It All Their Own Way in Their Last Two Clashes With New Yorkers; Scores 13 to 2 and 8 to 3.

NEW YORK, June 22.—The Boston Speed Boys made it five straight by trimming the Highlanders in a double bill this afternoon. Banker Stahl's Boys took both games without even a close [illegible], winning the first 13 to 2 [illegible] second game [illegible] was [illegible] 8 to 3.

[illegible] drew George McConnell [illegible] pitching opponent in the first game, and the game was over after the first few innings. McConnell was the star of the International League last season, but since joining the Yankees has been working in adverse form and was today [illegible] in favor of Carl Thompson, a college recruit.

The Sox got to McConnell in the second inning. Duffy Lewis who has been doing some hard batting in the series, led off with a single and Gardner and Stahl followed suit, Lewis tallying. Wagner [illegible] as "Banker" Jake pilfered second. Hall smacked a fine single to centre and Larry and Stahl crossed the pan.

The Sox got busy again in the third inning and scored four runs. Speaker and [illegible] doubles for a starter, [illegible] Stahl hammered out [illegible] Wagner scored the Manager with a single.

Boston scored one in the fourth inning, Gardner doubling, advancing on an out and scoring on Stahl's long sacrifice fly.

McConnell Is Benched.

Cady drove McConnell to the woods in the sixth inning, leading off with a double. Thompson then took the mound but he was no improvement. He walked Hall for a starter, Henriksen sent a slow roller to Thompson and he floated the ball over to the first base bleachers and two Sox crossed the plate. Yerkes singled scoring Henriksen and Speaker ended the inning by singling to centre and being thrown out pilfering.

At this stage of the game even the players lost interest in the doings and the teams changed places when only two were out. Even the umpires were asleep and it was up to the crowd to call the attention to the umpire that only two were gone.

Boston scored a couple of more in the seventh, Lewis poling out a long two bagger with two men on.

The Yankees scored their runs in the second and fourth innings. Zinn got free transportation in the second and was scored by Hartzell's triple. The other run came in the fourth. Cree tripled after one was gone and was scored by Zinn's sacrifice fly.

Second Game Also Easy.

The second game was as easy as the first. Manager Wolverton trotted out Jack Warhop for the second time during the series, and he again proved easy meat for the Speed Boys. Jack is a good pitcher, and at times previous to this season he has been able to hold the Boston boys, but he has not been able to since the Boston boys have taken first place in the league standing and fighting to retain it.

Stahl sent in Ray Collins, his only portsider, who has been in and out this season. Collins was wild at times, and gave many bases on balls, but he tightened up in the pinches and deserved his game.

For the first five innings the game was a good battle. Each team tallied in the opening session, and Boston took the lead in the third, but New York was in the game for a win and scored two runs in the fifth, taking the lead.

A one-run lead is not a game won

Melrose High Trims Everett by 10-2 Score

After seven innings of fast baseball the Everett High nine blew up at Everett yesterday afternoon, as the result of a squeeze play, perfectly executed, with the bases full, permitting the Melrose High boys to win an easy victory, 10 to 2.

The Everett players failed to show the classy form they displayed earlier in the season, and proved easy picking for the Melrose aggregation, who are tailenders in the Suburban League. While the game has no bearing on the league standing, the Everett lads felt disgruntled at their defeat at the hands of the "cellar champs."

Up to the seventh inning both nines played fast [illegible] was tied at 2 to 2 [illegible] to centre [illegible] and Brady was hit [illegible] ball. Filling the bases. Dieter [illegible] down a perfect bunt, scoring Wentzell. A hit sandwiched in between two errors scored three more runs.

In the ninth inning Lee was substituted for Murray. He proved unsteady, and when he was able to locate the plate, the Melrose boys straightened his slants out all over the lot, scoring four more runs.

PILGRIMS DROP TWO GREAT BATTING FESTS

League Leaders and Tail-Enders Score 48 Runs in a Double-Header.

...ed roared, probably in anger at Hooper ...because he had not taken him. ...The other episode occurred in the eighth when Meyers was at bat. One of "Dode" Brown's twisters parted Bresnan on his left foot. Bresnan danced sorrowfully about while the crowd furnished the music. They all lavished and roared until Bresnan recovered his equilibrium, struck a disinterested observer as being ...rash on the part of Bresnan to display physical suffering was applauded in the around ...Tobin, who had replaced Dode Miller in right field, did not arrive from Philadelphia, and Joy Kirke played in right field. Kirke was not used to the high sun of an early afternoon baseball game, and he lost the pellet in the sun's rays twice. Both of these occurrences were in that disastrous seventh inning, and they helped to prolong the agony. Shafer's cap to right was an easy catch, but just as it neared Kirke he lost track of it and it nearly missed tapping him on the head. Mathewson hit one to the right field fence in the same session. Kirke was close to it when it came through the sunlight like a shot. Kirke ducked and saved his neck, but not the ball.

Arthur Devlin fell asleep in the fifth inning of the second game and Kirke was a stolen third. O'Rourke missed a bad throw in an effort to catch Snodgrass off second in the sixth, and nobody tried to recover too hot until it was too late. Tyler failed to nail Snodgrass at third on Doyle's trip to the infield, and that helped the Giants to score runs.

Devlin saved a run in the sixth by careful repairing of a mistake. He and Tyler scored on Seeney's drive. But Devlin failed to be in the place ...ning ...which would have attracted Chief Meyers' attention—he strolled to ...with a reach ...distance, then made a dash ...and had his foot on the rubber before angry ...ody could ...ge him.

WORCESTER DEFEATS LYNN IN SENSATIONAL GAME, 4-1

WORCESTER, June 22. Timely hitting in the sixth and eighth innings of today's game gave Worcester a 4 to 1 victory over a well played contest.

Vaughan occupied the mound for Worcester and twirled fine ball. He was invariably with men on the bases. Ward, Lynn's pitcher who pitched and defeated the home team Friday afternoon, twirled a fine game, but weakened towards the end of the battle. Sensational one-hand catches by Gilhooley and Crum were features of the game.

Nature Doesn't Put an Orange in a Tin Box

It's hard to improve on Nature. If tin boxes or tinfoil were best for keeping in sweetness and flavor, old mother Nature would use that method and we might see oranges and apples and peaches growing on trees protected in that manner.

Man can't improve upon Nature. He has tried to, but every trial has resulted in FAILURE. Originally tobacco was packed in "plug" form. The tobacco leaves were squeezed under tremendous pressure. An outer covering of leaf was put on and every bit of the sweetness and flavor of the original leaf was retained.

Then came the age of convenience. Tobacco manufacturers—in order to make their product handy—granulated, sliced and shredded the original plug.

But the real fragrance and goodness of the tobacco could not be kept that way in the time that elapsed before the tobacco reached the smoker. Much of the fine flavor of the tobacco was LOST

Plug tobacco, for smoking or chewing, is SUPERIOR to any other form.

You can satisfy yourself as to the truth of this statement by trying Master Workman Plug Tobacco in your pipe. It may take a minute longer to whittle off enough tobacco to fill your pipe, but once tried, you'll admit it's pretty hard to improve upon nature.

Wells Anxious to Get Bout with Johnson

English Champion Declares He Will Go After Big Felow After Battle with Palzer.

RYE BEACH, N. Y., June 22.—Bombardier Wells, heavyweight champion of England, who is slated to box ten rounds with A. Palzer, the big white hope, at Madison Square Garden in New York on the night of June 28, is working hard at his training quarters here and is already "fit as trout," as he expresses it.

Wells was in condition when he reached this country, but he thought it advisable to take a couple of weeks hard work in order to acclimate himself to America. Wells believes that he can fight as well in New York as London.

"I am still anxious to fight Jack Johnson," said the husky Englishman. "I believe that I can give the negro a battle and I do not mean to boast when I say it. I only express it as my sincere opinion. I intend to whip Palzer decisively if I can, and should I be fortunate enough to do it, I will regard it as an earned right to meet the title holder."

TWO YALE CAPTAINS PLANNING CAMPAIGNS

Yale has two new athletic captains chosen within as many days, and they have begun planning their policy for next season. They are certain to continue the graduate coaching system in some form but they may adopt some decided modifications of the method which was put into effect by Captain Romeyn of the crew and Captain Merritt of the nine last Fall.

It is almost certain that Frank Quinby, head coach of the Yale nine during the past season, will return another year. He instilled fight into the team which, although it played miserable ball in some of its games, showed an improvement over the previous year. The material was splendid but the team lost its series to Princeton and Brown, and lost to Holy Cross and Williams. It was tied by the University of Pennsylvania and Cornell but won from Harvard.

The quality of baseball played in the Yale-Harvard game at New Haven was so inferior, however, that no Yale man is boasting about the Harvard series. Quinby will, however, be given another trial.

NEWSPAPERS REFUSE HILTON CLOTHING ADS

Several weeks ago the Hilton Clothing Co. offered an advertisement to papers in Worcester, Brockton and Haverhill, referring to their Annual Quarter-Off Sale. This advertisment was refused by these papers on the ground that the local clothing merchants (who spent money all the year round in these papers) had to be protected. This is a splendid tribute to Hilton values, and should not only impress the people of these three cities but the general public of New England that the clothing made and retailed by the Hilton Co. is the world's best value.

To Develop New Team.

The St. Louis Browns' pitching department is the first to feel the sting of the Stovall management. In office one week the new leader decided that Barney Pelty, Albert "Red" Nelson and Joe Lake cannot aid him in developing a winning team. To feel out the older seven American League clubs waivers has been asked on these three pitchers.

"I must go out and develop almost an entirely new team," said Stovall, "and I can't develop veterans. Young blood is needed on the team, and I have little of that. When the team loses I get the blame, so it is up to me to give St. Louis a winner."

Double Tie at Newton Mixed Foursome Play

One of the largest fields of golfers that ever took part in an open mixed foursome tourney participated at Newton, Friday and Saturday for the prizes offered by this club.

A double tie resulted, as Miss Katherine Edgett, Winchester, and her partner, Frederick Martin of Brae-Burn and Ek[illegible] were both low gross and net with a splendid card of 82-8-74.

Miss E. S. Porter of the Country Club and H. H. Cook, Albemarle, tied with the above pair at 82 for low gross; while C. S. Sprague, Newton, and Miss A. D. Rogers, Chestnut Hill, got into the tie with 89-15-74.

Two two pairs tied for low gross honors will have to play off, and in the event that Miss Porter and Cook win there will be no further dispute as to who will take the prizes, but if Miss Edgett and Martin win, Cook and Miss Porter will still be tied for low net, and another play-off will be necessary.

The summary shows many of the leading men and women golfers in the State, and is representative as a field of the best mixed foursome teams in Massachusetts.

COL. BOGEY'S SON WINS.

Famous Golfer's Offspring Victor Over Many Opponents.

Handicap vs. Par, a new competition to Massachusetts golfers, was tried at Brae Burn yesterday with the result that T. M. Pray won the cup offered. He finished all even with his imaginary opponent with his handicap allowance.

Handicap vs Bogey is a similar competition, but since the national ratings have come out, Massachusetts players are getting accustomed to this new mythical opponent, who is a son of Colonel Bogey, but still called "Par."

YACHTSMEN HAVE DAY IN BUZZARDS BAY

Foraminifer, Joyette and the Pioneer Winners in the Various Classes.

BUZZARDS BAY, June 22.—The third club regatta of the Beverly Yacht Club was run off this afternoon in a light breeze off the club house at Wings Neck.

There were five starters in the twenty-one-foot class which was sent out over course 11. This is a triangular course of thirteen miles, the first leg to Bird Island then to Bow Bells Buoy to Scraggy Neck with a close haul and run home.

D. T. Whittemore jockeyed for the start and held it all over the course, though he was nearly overhauled by the Saracen on the last leg, and barely beat the Windsor boat by two seconds.

The Seacoon and Sallie VIII, which are usually in the lead in a good stiff blow, were in the rear nearly four minutes behind the leaders.

They were sent over course 15 of eight miles to Bird Island and return. The Pioneer showed good form and led the fleet all over the course, finishing an easy winning from her nearest competitor, the Nabana.

The Lethe, which was one of last year's Crane boats, was sailed by Miss Priscilla Crane. Charles Whittemore was race judge.

M'CARTHY HAS FUTURE.

Western Heavyweight Blessed With a Hard Wallop.

Luther McCarthy did not set any rivers aflame by his battle in Philadelphia, but he did enough to convince the experts that saw him in action that he must be given quite some attention. For a big man that intends to be a fighter Luther possesses the one necessary qualification—he has the wallop. For being agile, and handing out the fancy stuff, Luther is no bearcat. He will learn, and when he does some of our aspiring "White Hopes" will be found among the missing.

Billy McCarney, who has McCarthy in tow, is seeking some real clever fellow to teach his battler a few fancy steps. The fighter appears intelligent enough to pick up this part of the work quickly.

Fitz Wins Match.

MANCHESTER-BY-THE-SEA, [illegible]—A field of fifteen players took part today in the members' handicap golf competition on the Essex County Club links. Reginald Fitz won the net score prize with a card of 76. R. H. Whittemore's 82 was the lowest gross score of the day.

RECORD-BREAKING FIELD AT OAKLEY

Ninety Golfers Participate in the Opening Matches of Annual Spring Meet.

Ninety golfers were on hand yesterday at Oakley for the start of their annual Spring golf meeting. While the scoring was not as low as has been the case at many of the links this Spring, the class of the field shows that most of the low handicap men participated, and were unable, in all but four instances, to do better than eighty.

N. W. Dean of the home club took the low gross trophy with a card of 77, playing very consistent golf with an outward journey of 40 and an inward round of 37.

H. H. Cook of Albemarle won low net with 78—13—65, and tied for second gross with A. G. Lockwood of Belmont.

The number of withdrawals lessened the number of low handicap men who will continue in the match play on Monday.

The best cards:

| | | | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| N. W. Dean, Oakley. | | | | | | | | | | |
| Out | [illegible] | 4 | 4 | 3 | 6 | 4 | 5 | [illegible] | [illegible] | 40 |
| In | [illegible] | 4 | 4 | 3 | 5 | 3 | 4 | [illegible] | [illegible] | 37—77 |
| A. G. Lockwood, Belmont. | | | | | | | | | | |

| In | 5 | 4 | 4 | 4 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 5 | 4 | —39—78 |
| H. H. Cook, Albemarle. | | | | | | | | | | |

H. L. Sherman of the home club appeared to have the best net [illegible] with his outward round of 42 and a good start [illegible] inward home, but the inaccuracy [illegible] proved his undoing, where he required a 10, which lost him the cup by one stroke, as his score was 90-24-66.

Tomorrow the match play starts in two flights, the championship being played without handicap and the second flight having the handicaps allotted by the Massachusetts Golf Association.

SAVIN HILL YACHT CLUB HOLDS RACES

Large Number of Boats Take Part in Inter-Club Regatta at Dorchester.

The largest inter-club yacht race ever held in Dorchester Bay took place yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Savin Hill Yacht Club. The water was smoothed and a light wind from the Southwest made it a most ideal day for the yachtsmen, who sent their respective craft over the waves in very fast time.

Clarice Crosses Line First at Manchester

MANCHESTER, June 22.—The race for the one design boats of the Manchester Yacht Club, the second in the series for the season, proved a most interesting one, in which the Clarice proved an easy winner, getting the gun seven minutes and forty seconds ahead of her nearest rival the Minx.

Eight boats were entered today, the wind being light from the South and full of spots. It was anybody's race on the beat out to first mark, the Minx having the best start, but the Clarice, which strayed away from the bunch, caught a fine breeze, which gave her a tremendous advantage, and she held it all over the course.

The boats had a run to mark two, and a reach home, the finish being at Whaleback. The summary:

STAR TEAMS PICKED FROM HIGH SCHOOLS OF GREATER BOSTON

ALL-INTERSCHOLASTIC BASEBALL SELECTIONS OF THE BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

By OTTO B. HANSON.

With the close of the scholastic baseball season this week the Boston AMERICAN [illegible] selects its [illegible] scholastic team, which each year is awaited with great [illegible] by [illegible] the followers of schoolboy athletics.

The season just closing has been one of the [illegible] successful, although at the beginning of the year the weather was [illegible] games had to be canceled. [illegible] a dozen or more lads [illegible] exceptionally fine fielding and [illegible]

[illegible] close and [illegible] baseball this season. [illegible] furnished great excitement [illegible] A surprise was [illegible] when Melrose [illegible] Somerville High, and [illegible] season has been one [illegible]

Medford Wins Title.

Much credit should be given the Medford High team in this league. After a very poor [illegible] coach [illegible] got [illegible] boys together [illegible] won the [illegible] championship.

The preparatory [illegible] championship was not as close [illegible] followers of Brookline High, Newton High and Cambridge High and Latin would have liked. Brookline was a winner in easy fashion, defeating both Newton [illegible] and Latin [illegible] very weak [illegible] with the former [illegible]

The fights in the Mystic Valley, Middlesex, Interurban and Midland leagues [illegible] all interesting and furnished a lot of excitement [illegible] followers of the [illegible] boys athletics.

[illegible] of the State [illegible] been aware [illegible] three teams [illegible] for the [illegible] Kline, Walt[illegible] and [illegible] Seanol of [illegible] appear [illegible] best teams [illegible] and if [illegible] these schools for the championship the games would certainly be hummers.

Of the [illegible] this season about [illegible] dozen [illegible] Joe Fahey of Medford High, Davis of Medford High [illegible] Harry Doe[illegible] of Brookline High [illegible] Whittaker of [illegible] Frank [illegible] ris of [illegible] of [illegible] Waltham High [illegible] good work for their [illegible]

Fahey in the Selection.

Of [illegible] Joe Fahey is picked for the AMERICAN'S all-interscholastic team. [illegible] several bumps at the [illegible] of the season, he has been the [illegible] the hard games [illegible] Walter [illegible] Whittaker [illegible] Waltham High and Harry [illegible] also [illegible] it may be [illegible] considered before Whittaker was chosen.

Joe Fahey has [illegible] a good [illegible] Suburban League [illegible] off [illegible] has a large list of strike-outs [illegible] work has [illegible] Whittaker and [illegible] stronger teams than Waltham High [illegible] It is the writer's belief that [illegible] on "Rollo" Fagan.

Many clever catchers were developed in the schoolboy ranks, and it is hard to pick the best man. The [illegible] is almost as puzzling as that of the pitchers. Captain Harry Jesseau of the High School of Commerce is picked for the AMERICAN'S team, but he is hard pressed by Sweetland of Everett High, Anderson of Brookline High and "Connie" Murphy of Malden High.

Harry Jesseau has certainly earned a place in the first team. There is no other high school player who has worked harder for his team and he has practically been "the whole works." He is a real live wire. To him the battle is never lost till the last man has been declared out in the last inning.

Clever Catcher and Fine Coach.

Harry is a very clever catcher and a fine coach for the pitcher. He can handle the benders with the best of them and his throwing to the bases has been accurate. Jesseau is a good hitter and an exceptionally fast man on the bases. While on the sacks he has his opponents bothered all the time, for he is a dangerous man. He has stolen many bases this year, and his work on the bases added many runs to the scores.

Sweetland of Everett High has made a fine record behind the bat this season, but he is not as fast as Jesseau, so he is second choice. Sweetland has a great whip and his arm was respected by all of the players in the Suburban League. His throw is fast and accurate and he killed off many players trying to pilfer an extra sack. His batting has been good and he is one of the high men on the team in batting and he leads nearly all of the schoolboy catchers in this department. Anderson of Brookline High and Frank Rogers of Boston College High have also done good work behind the bat.

Captain Henry Nash of Newton High is given the first base position on the first team, although he is hard pressed for the honors by "Dutch" Bold of Everett High. It was not by a wide margin that Nash was given the berth, but his all-around playing earned him the position. Nash is [illegible] of the best fielding schoolboy first basemen. His hitting has been timely, and he is a fast man on the bases.

"Dutch" Bold was one of the heaviest hitters in the Suburban League this season [illegible] he is not the finished fielder that Nash is [illegible] that it what gives Nash the position. The all-interscholastic team would [illegible] well supplied with heavy hitters, so a finished fielder would be best for first base. Johnson of Waltham High has played a good game at first for Waltham High [illegible] year.

George Brickley of Everett High is [illegible] for the second base berth on the first team. No other second baseman really gave Brickley a hard run for the position. [illegible] Everett lad's work has loomed up [illegible] His fielding has been [illegible] and his batting has been hard and [illegible] Several league games [illegible] won by the timely two base hits of Brickley [illegible] he was really the individual star of the Everett High team.

Jack Lawless of Medford High, who was picked for the AMERICAN'S first team last year, failed to show his old form, but he [illegible] good enough baseball to "make" the second [illegible] team.

Twombly at Shortstop.

"Babe" Twombly of Medford High is picked for the shortstop position. The work of Twombly this season has been the very best. In every game from the start he showed class and not once did he fall down. He fields all kinds of raps sharply and he pegs the ball over to first base like a big leaguer.

Barron is playing a fine game at shortstop for Boston College High this season, and [illegible] Norton has put up a good game for Somerville, but the latter has not [illegible] of the 1911 season [illegible] could not be picked for either the first or second teams. Barron has been one of the live wires of the Boston College [illegible] this season [illegible] by hard faith [illegible] High School [illegible] this season.

[illegible] of Brookline High won third base by [illegible] over [illegible] of his opponents. The work of the Brookline [illegible] season, and he has certainly earned the berth on the first team. Thielscher played a few games at second base at the beginning of the season and showed fine style. When [illegible] moved to third base he improved more. His [illegible] has been good and his work on [illegible] been fast. [illegible] is a [illegible] fielder and [illegible] kinds of chances with but a very few errors. He has a strong arm and gets the ball over to first base like a veteran.

[illegible] of Dorchester High, Norton of Boston [illegible] High and [illegible] of [illegible] have [illegible] played good games at third base and [illegible] is hard to pick the man for the second team out of [illegible] but the AMERICAN gives the place to [illegible] of Dorchester High. Rochelle has played a strong game at third this season and he has been much of the "works" of the Dorchester High infield. He is a clever fielder and has a strong wing and gets the ball over to first base with the best of them.

Brookline Has Two Places.

Brookline High has two positions [illegible] on the first team. While Kelly and Walizer of Brookline [illegible] earned positions on the honor team by good playing, good batting and good fielding. Kelly is played in left field and Walizer in centre, while Captain "Stu" Early of Medford High [illegible] given the right field berth.

This outfield would be one of the strongest developed in the high schools for the past few weeks. The three players are [illegible] fielders, fine hitters, good throwers and are fast. All three cover an acre of territory. It is expected that if these three men ever played on the same team they would be so fast that one man would always be in another's territory for the hits.

Baseball Develops Many Good Comedians

Old timers will tell you about the comedians in baseball - of the men who used to make the stands roar with laughter. How Arlie Latham used to walk the coaching line like a tightrope performer and all the rest of it. Yet present day enthusiasts should not grieve. For "Noodles" Schaefer, of the Senators, is as good as any of the has-beens. And Kid Gleason of the Sox comes a close second.

When Schaefer gets in the third base box and Gleason starts talking to him from the Sox bench there's rough humor for the most particular. Schaefer's specialty is yelling to the folks in the stands, however. Somebody is almost certain to scream out, "Hey, why ain't you in the lineup?" This is the signal for a display of pantomime. "Noodles" or "Germany," as he is more familiarly known, proceeds to show how he holds his bat, how he stops a ground ball and his position at the plate.

Then he proceeds into an interpretation of the Washington signals. In Wednesday's game here a certain Senator was batting and he drew two strikes and three balls.

"Here's the safe-hit signal," shouted Schaefer to the stands and turned his back on the [illegible] The latter promptly struck out. "He [illegible] crossed my signals," was Schaefer's [illegible] caution.

[illegible] earned his nickname by [illegible] the opposing pitchers [illegible] tossing pebbles and [illegible] at Schaefer. Another of his [illegible] is to throw pieces of paper on [illegible] of the [illegible] baseman [illegible] He worked this on [illegible] Baker several times during the recent Athletic series, but the champion broke even on the exchange of wit.

'Chick' Gandil Proves Find for Griffith

WASHINGTON, June 2[illegible].—Whether [illegible] pays to go into the market and bid for young [illegible] of promise even if the price is high, seems answered in the case of Gandil, whose addition to the Nationals virtually made the team.

It is generally understood that he cost $15,000, including the [illegible] valuation of four players and a cash balance, the deal being similar [illegible] to the one by which Rossie went from Baltimore to the Athletics.

R[illegible] was [illegible] that was entirely the fault of the player who put himself out of the game.

So far Gandil has been a success. He has proved that he is a star [illegible] while possibly he may not [illegible] as well after he has been [illegible] shaped up the [illegible] bat around .300. And that kind of [illegible] is not found every day.

Jennings' Pitchers After More Work

DETROIT, June 2[illegible].—[illegible] recently asked waivers [illegible] Covington, Hughie Jennings said at that time that he was through with Covington for good. Hughie thought the matter over and Covington remained.

Covington explained his recent failures by saying that he did not get enough work. Bench duty made him ineffective, he claimed.

Works also is constantly after work. Works is an excellent pitcher, one of the best in the league, but he needs work. Covington claims the same is necessary to keep him in condition. Hughie [illegible] Dubuc, Willett, Works [illegible] Covington in order for awhile to give them a chance to do regular work and show what is in them. They say they can do [illegible] they have displayed at times [illegible] to.

Mullin has not [illegible] good for several weeks. He appears too heavy, while Summers is not in shape. Willett needs lots of work and is big enough to stand any amount.

Mike Gibbons Would Rather Win on Points

CLEVELAND, June 22.—Mike Gibbons regrets. He wishes he had been more saving of the knockouts he imposed after getting his spectacular start in New York last Fall. Why? Because every time he [illegible] his hands the sport public takes it for granted that Mike Gibbons and the referee will be the only sensible persons in the ring when Mike puts on speed. With Gibbons' reputation made, fight followers expect too much of him.

Manager Eddie Reddy told of his protege's peculiar plight when in Cleveland.

"Every place we go," complained Reddy, "the fans look for Mike to rush out, hit the man on the jaw and watch the referee tick off the seconds. Let me observe that this is no cinch. A fellow who knows anything is going [illegible] be [illegible] when he gets hurt. It's mighty hard to knock out a man that doesn't want to take the chance of being knocked out.

Davis Is Disgusted with Cleveland Team

CLEVELAND, June 22.—Manager Harry Davis of the Naps is just as disgusted with the work of the Cleveland [illegible] as any Detroit fan is with that of the Tigers. Davis evidently finds work a little different with Cleveland than he did with the Athletics. He says:

"I have been connected with baseball many years. I have been connected with all sorts of teams, in all sorts of conditions, but never in my experience have I seen a team which showed such little [illegible] as this club.

"There will be some changes [illegible] near [illegible] They will take place at the earliest possible minute. Some of the players now with the club will be disagreeably surprised. ## Cornell Crew Victory in Doubt
Courtney Writes of Big Regatta

By CHARLES E. COURTNEY.

Veteran coach of Cornell crews and regarded as one of America's highest authorities on rowing.

The eyes of the American rowing world are now on Poughkeepsie. Nearly all of the crews have commenced the final stretch of training on the Hudson in preparation for June 29.

Men in the know realize that the day of the annual parade, with the Cornell crews in the lead, is over, and that those who line the banks and fill the observation train and water craft this year, will at least witness a boat race. Last year's grueling contest gave that prophecy.

The Cornell varsity crew of the last three years have been as near perfection as all the science and skill we have in Ithaca could make them.

Each year the Red and White sweepswingers have been pressed closer than they were the season before, until last year Columbia, once the great rowing friend and rival of the Ithacans, upset the calculations, and the result was one of the greatest final scraps I have ever seen.

Columbia Has Great Crew.

From the standpoint of the unaffiliated sportsman, the regatta season will be even more interesting than that of last year. With the exception of one man that great Columbia crew is again at Poughkeepsie, in the pink of condition, trained to the [illegible] and prepared to give Cornell the race of her rowing life.

"Jim" Rice has a tip-top crew, one of the best, if not the best, that has ever sat in a Columbia shell.

Then, too, there will be more than two [illegible] in the race when the bombs are fired from the bridge.

I do not think Columbia and Cornell will have things all their own way, for there is Syracuse to be reckoned with. In 1911 Syracuse finished last, nearly a minute behind Cornell, but Ten Eyck's boys do not do that two years in succession.

I believe that the eight from the City of Salt will be a factor this season, and both Columbia and Cornell will have to look well to their laurels, not forgetting that there are eight orange-colored oars in the event.

Of course, I have not seen either of these crews row, and base my opinion merely on hearsay. After all, only the race itself can tell the true story.

Stanford's First Race Here.

A feature of the 1912 regatta will be the initial appearance at Poughkeepsie of an eight from Leland Stanford, champions of the West. I know nothing about the crew itself, but I do know that Murphy is a clever coach, and if he will risk sending a crew all the way across the continent to compete against the best crews in the East it must be a good one.

In a measure this crew will be handicapped by the tiresome journey and the strangeness of the country, but I am inclined to believe that they will suffer no inconvenience on account of the change in climate. On the contrary, the change should be exhilarating rather than [illegible], and I do not fear the debilitating [illegible] that the California climate of this season would be likely to have on Eastern athletes.

Penn Has Not Shown Much.

Pennsylvania has not done well this year in the early regattas, but after all these two-mile sprints are but poor indicators of what a crew may be able to do in the four-mile event.

I have heard nothing from Wisconsin. [illegible] men from the Middle West have had hard luck at Poughkeepsie during the last few seasons, with sickness and other troubles in their training camp.

They deserve a great deal of credit for their courage and stick-to-it-iveness. All of us at Poughkeepsie have a warm spot in our hearts for Wisconsin, and we certainly wish them better luck this year. It is no sport to win from a crew that is not in condition to do its best.

Hard Luck for Cornell.

Cornell has had her share of setbacks this year. We have no rowing tank at Ithaca, and ice in Cayuga Lake and the inlet prevented the men from getting any water practice until late in the Spring. Then the loss of the stroke was a heavy blow. E. F. Bowen rowed on his freshman crew and stroked the varsity for two years. He pulled the stroke oar on the 1912 crew until late this Spring, when he was forced to retire from the university on account of continued illness.

W. G. Distler was then moved from No. 6 to stroke. Distler is a good oarsman, one of the never-say-die kind, but his manipulation of the sweep is essentially different from that of his predecessor. He rows a shorter and slightly higher stroke, and it took several weeks to get the eight made over so that they could follow him. The men swung into line nicely just before the Harvard-Cornell-Princeton regatta.

This is not a hard luck story. I do not hesitate to say that Cornell has a good crew down at Poughkeepsie. I do not think, however, that it is better than last year's plucky eight. Still it may be better, and then, too, it may have to be better in order to lead across the finish line. But on account of the change in stroke it will be a different looking crew from the 1911 eight.

Four Veterans in Boat.

There are but four senior veterans in the boat, Ferguson, Kruse, Wakeley and Distler. All of these men have been in the boat since their freshman year, and have never rowed in a losing race. Of the other men, Spransy is from the freshman boat of last year; Bates is a former football man and rowed with the junior varsity last season, Elliott pulled the bow oar in last year's eight, and Lum was also a member of that crew.

This crew is not perfect. Indeed, I never have seen a perfect crew. But the men in the 1912 varsity are hardened oarsmen and they know how to row. There is little more that I can teach them. My main aim now is to keep them from going stale. The rest lies with the men themselves. All eight well grounded in the rudiments [illegible] principles should reach a stage before the event for which they are training when the coach can do nothing for them. That is where the Cornell crew is now.

Up until two weeks ago Cornell did not have a good four-oared crew. They were veterans and rowed nicely together in the shell, but for some reason they could not make the speed.

At that time I shifted them around and now have a good combination. Dole remained at the stroke seat, C. W. Brown, a junior varsity man, was placed at bow; McNear, another junior varsity oarsman, took No. 2, and I placed Chapman, an entirely new man, at No. 3.

There is still plenty of room for improvement in this combination, but the three weeks at Poughkeepsie will do wonders for them. On account of the absence of a coxswain it takes a cleaner oarsman to make good in a four, and the steersman's seat in the bow is often extremely hard to fill.

Cornell's freshman crew is not up to the standard. True, they won at Cambridge, but in a race that was scarcely a credit to either crew. It is a fairly good smooth water crew, but rough water seems to be the stumbling block. There will have to be a great deal of improvement if a good showing is to be made against the picked combination of youngsters on the Hudson.

We of Cornell realize that the slogan at Poughkeepsie is "We must beat Cornell!" But our own motto is "Cornell must win!"

Davxidson in Fine Form and Medford Wins, 3 to 0; Early's Batting Feature.

The pitching of Davidson and the batting of Early marked a fast game between Medford High and Malden High at Medford yesterday afternoon, Medford winning 3 to 0. Davidson fanned twenty men and allowed but three hits.

Early in the third inning batted out a home run, scoring two runs.

Davidson was in fine fettle and had the Malden boys eating out of his hand. In only two innings did Malden have any chance to score and each time the Medford twirler tightened up and held the Malden batters safe.

The victory of Medford and the defeat of Everett clinched first place in the Suburban League for the Medford lads.

SOCCER COMING FAST.

Association Football Crowding Out American Game.

Soccer football is stealthily gaining a foothold in the East and in the central western part of the country. Already it has crowded out the American game on the Pacific slope and while it has not yet supplanted the Eastern game on the Atlantic coast, a league has been formed with six colleges as members and indications are that two more will join for next year.

Princeton and Brown have been formally invited to join the Intercollegiate Association Football League, whose membership already comprises Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Columbia, Pennsylvania and Haverford. It is believed that the invitations will be accepted, as the athletic authorities at Princeton and Brown have already indicated their desire to compete.

A SLIGHT CHANGE IN TRAFFIC RULES IS SUGGESTED

If Slow Moving Vehicles Were Required to Keep Towards Right Curb and Other Vehicles Near Centre of a Thoroughfare, Traffic Would Be Expedited and Thereby Public Safeguarded.

By J. C. KERRISON.

The street commissioners of the city of Boston can do an inestimable amount of good in the relieving of traffic conditions and safeguarding the public, if they would change one section of its traffic regulations. This is the section which provides that vehicles shall keep as near to the right hand curb as possible.

If this were so changed as to cause slow-moving vehicles to keep close to the right hand curb and permit the more rapidly moving vehicles to keep to the right of the centre of the thoroughfare in each direction there is no question in the minds of a great many drivers of horse-drawn and motor vehicles that it would considerably relieve the difficulties of the present day traffic in the congested streets of the city.

To drive an automobile as close to the right hand curb as is possible is in itself a dangerous proposition. A step from the sidewalk to the street on the part of a pedestrian would undoubtedly mean disaster.

If slow moving vehicles, such as heavily-laden teams, were kept on the extreme right, near the curb, it would permit more rapidly moving vehicles, either horse-drawn or motor driven, to use that portion of the right hand side of the street nearest to the centre with greater safety to the public at large and greater safety to the parties using them.

To drive a motor vehicle, or, for that matter, any other vehicle at 12 or 14 miles an hour as close as possible to the right hand curb might very properly be considered as reckless driving and under ordinary conditions it is believed that the average judge would so rule [illegible] the same thoroughfare [illegible] of the street at that rate can be done, and is done, with absolute safety. One gentleman said in speaking about the matter yesterday: "I would not drive my car at any speed above eight or nine miles an hour near the curb of any street, and yet I can drive [illegible] using the right hand car tracks, at fourteen to fifteen miles an hour [illegible]

[illegible] the congested streets of the city proper, it would expedite traffic to a considerable degree. No one would be injured by it, but everyone would find in it advantages which are not to be found in the present-day law.

[illegible] each class of vehicles together [illegible] of greater safety to the pedestrians, and [illegible] control over traffic than they do at present.

Several arrests for violation of the present rule have been made and convictions secured but there is a great question if the Massachusetts Highway Commission would consider such violation as injurious to the public welfare or of sufficient consequence to warrant any greater punishment than that inflicted by the court before which it was heard. One police officer in the city of Boston made several arrests of drivers who used that portion of the right hand side of the street nearest the centre line, and, under the law, was warranted in doing so, but when it was pointed out to him by certain powers that such arrests are hardly warranted under the conditions and that it was safer for a man to drive nearest to the centre line than nearest to the curb, he saw the justice of this contention and arrests for violation of this particular law have been less numerous than previously.

Another rule which should be changed, but which will require legislative enactment, is that defining how a turn shall be made at the intersection of a street so that this rule shall not apply to one way streets which of late have become more or less numerous in the cities throughout the Commonwealth. There are few people who drive vehicles [illegible] streets who do not violate this rule, and in some cases arrests have been made and convictions secured as a result of this reading of the law for which there is absolutely no reason nor application in instances of one-way streets.

As the AMERICAN has stated in earlier issues the trouble is not with the law as much as it is, perhaps, with the enforcement of the same and this enforcement applies equally to drivers of horse drawn and motor vehicles.

The driver of a vehicle is greatly handicapped at all places by his inability to know what the other man is going to do. If he knew what the other fellow would do he would not have any difficulties. Unfortunately, that is impossible.

If pedestrians would exercise the same [illegible] of care and consideration [illegible] as the majority of drivers do for pedestrians there is no [illegible] but which a great many of the [illegible] that are constantly [illegible] necessary, be eliminated [illegible] as a rule is too unmindful of his own safety. He does not exercise that due regard for care and caution that is often referred to in legal documents and will step off the sidewalk in the path of an approaching automobile whereas if he had [illegible] either direction he would have [illegible] that he was entering a danger zone.

All these things are a matter of education, an education which has [illegible] fully conducted in bigger cities than Boston and an education which the sooner it is underaken in this city the better it will be for all users of the public highway.

At the four corners after crossing the bridge, curve right and at the end of the street turn right into Wellesley street and then direct to the square in Weston. At the ivy-covered church turn left and follow the main road along its many curves through Weston, Wayland and across the railroad track at South Sudbury. Half a mile beyond the railroad crossing from South Sudbury one sees an old sign-post erected in 1770 and at the three corners just beyond turn left, which road carries one by the old Wayside Inn, made memorable by Longfellow's famous tales of the Wayside Inn. This road twists and turns, carrying one to the watering trough, at which point turn left and follow trolley into the city of Marlboro. At the monument at the end of the Marlboro main street bear left with the trolley and at Lakeside avenue turn right leaving the lake on the left.

This road continues direct to Northboro, thence to Shrewsbury. From Northboro to Shrewsbury there is a steady climb, but good, the surface is good and one need not fear difficulties. At Shrewsbury square, just after passing the monument on the right, one reaches a fork in the road which is posted "Both roads to Worcester." Forget the right road and bear left with trolley down a long hill to the causeway over Lake Quinsigamond, then comes a long, high climb from the lake to Shrewsbury street, where bear left with trolley and direct to the new Union Station. Follow trolley tracks to the railroad bridge direct on Front street with the trolleys to the city of Worcester, from which point the trip can be extended as may be desired, or the return to Boston be made via Stirling, Clinton, Bolton, Stowe, Maynard, Concord, Arlington or Boston.

An approximate distance of the round trip to Worcester by the detailed route is 87½ miles and by the optional route 110 miles.

Western Concern Establishes Its New England Branch Here.

The J. I. Case threshing machine, makers of the well known Case car, has established a New England agency with headquarters here in Boston. The company has secured temporary quarters at No. 8 Columbus avenue, and will remain there until the completion of its proposed new salesroom and service station on Commonwealth avenue.

Mr. George England, who comes from the factory to look after the interests of the Case car, has had considerable experience in the automobile business in this country and he is confident that, with the famous reputation of the Case company in the carriage and farming implement construction, the Case car will meet with great success in this locality.

Studebaker

The $800 Studebaker-Flanders "20"

The Studebaker-Flanders "20" has a tremendous price advantage.

No other car, offering as much value, approaches its price.

It is a real car, modern throughout in design and construction, large enough, and so powerful that you will never find road conditions in which your Studebaker "20" cannot spin its wheels.

The motor is a marvel, very speedy, quick to pick up, flexible, the kind of a motor a driver grows to like and have full confidence in.

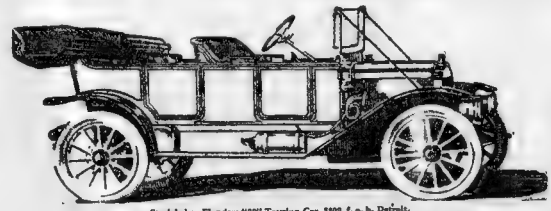
The Studebaker "20" transmission system is of the standard three-speed type, any car speed you wish up to 55 miles an hour. The rear axle is remarkably well designed and built, giving the best of service.

Every Studebaker "20" body gets 17 coats of paint and varnish, which are properly rubbed and aged. If you take care of your car, your Studebaker body will equal any automobile body on the market.

These are some obvious points which show the car's value.

But the deeper you go into the design and manufacture of the Studebaker "20" the better you will like it. We watch every detail.

Every Studebaker "20" is built not only for the first mile but for the 20,000th mile. In those qualities which make for endurance and lasting satisfaction, the Studebaker "20" is incomparably first. Why? Because it is Studebaker-built, and Studebaker always builds that way.



Studebaker-Flanders "20" Touring Car, $800, f. o. b. Detroit.
Equipped, as above, with Top, Windshield, Prest-O-Lite Tank and Speedometer, $885.

No-Rim-Cut Tires
10% Oversize
Equip One-Third the Cars

One-third of all new cars going out this year are equipped with Goodyear tires.

About one-third of all motor car owners have now adopted these tires.

And one-third of all cars at this year's Shows had Goodyear tire equipment.

Such is the present status of these wondrous tires. And the demand has doubled in the past six months.

Tire Upkeep Cut in Two

A million and a quarter of these premier tires have now gone into use. They have been tested out on some 200,000 cars.

They were tested on our claim that No-Rim-Cut tires cut the average tire bills in two. And the present demand proves they did it.

How They Do It

In addition to that, No-Rim-Cut tires are 10 per cent over the rated size. And 10 per cent oversize, under average conditions, adds 25 per cent to the tire mileage.

They save, in fact, more than that. For No-Rim-Cut tires are the final result of 13 years spent in tire making.

In perfecting them we tested out 240 formulas and fabrics. We tested them by metered mileage on testing machines in our factory.

Our 1912 Tire Book—based on 13 years of tire making—is filled with facts you should know. Ask us to mail it to you.

SOUVENIR OF LAKE RONKONKOMA,

FREE TO EVERYBODY

ANSWERING THIS ADVERTISEMENT.

EVERY person answering and complying with conditions of this advertisement will receive Absolutely Free a Silver Spoon In addition to this you may get a Free Lot.

How many words can you form from letters contained in the words

"EMANCIPATION DAY."

It Costs You Nothing to Try In This Contest of Wits

AWARDS—Every person will receive a Silver Spoon The two persons sending in the largest number of correct words will each receive a deed for one lot situated near LAKE RONKONKOMA

THE CONDITIONS governing the contest are simple. No foreign words or abbreviations can be used nor can the same letter be used more times in any word than appearing twice in the words "EMANCIPATION DAY" Words must be arranged in columns and numbered. Use words in singular form and nouns.

NOTICE—In the event of a tie of two or more contestants for any of the cash awards, duplicate awards of the same kind and value as that offered will be made to each person tying.

TIED LISTS identical contestants with ballots of their lists are tied for any cash awards, duplicate awards of the same kind and value will be made to each person tying.

WE RESERVE the right to make additional awards should the papers submitted seem to warrant it, as we are the judges of the contest.

A SMALL FEE to be paid for procuring deed or any other charge or filing connected with this advertisement.

THERE IS no obligation whatever upon the part of any contestant to buy land or property in this contest. The deed of a small lot, or part of a lot, is given to each one or more purchasers by them. Act a deed given for it when title is clear.

WE DO NOT publish a list of words found by any contestant nor the number found by any person, and full information will be given to no one.

WE HAVE more than two hundred letters of recommendation from contestants located in our office, which may be seen upon request of any one interested.

WE RESERVE the right to accept all lots awarded as this contest.

The judges in this contest will be two parties who are absolutely unconcerned with the awards before or after the awards.

RONKONKOMA is the name of a beautiful lake where there is sailing, fishing and boating, and is a most beautiful spot on Long Island, being the terminus of the great Motor Parkway and only 45 miles from New York City. The Long Island Railroad runs 400 trains per day from Long Island City to New York City and Brooklyn, so that access to and from the city is quick and convenient. There is room on this property to build from one to one hundred cottages, making a home in a beautiful locality, and reducing the cost of living to a minimum. The contestants who receive the deeds for lots will find that the population of Lake Ronkonkoma will increase about 10 per cent within the next few years, as the speeding automobile makes Long Island's beauty spots more accessible.

☞ An optional contract has just been signed for the laying of Motor Parkways through this property. It will extend from Lake Ronkonkoma to the Sound, on one end, and near the lake on the other end, and will be completed in the year 1913. Look at ROSKONKOMA on the printed map.

☞ Now recollect, every person replying to this advertisement will get a Souvenir Silver Spoon. Therefore be sure to give your correct name and address. It will make no difference whether you are successful in the contest or not. These Silver Spoons will be mailed to you if by chance there should be more replies received than we have Spoons to send, we will have additional ones made as quickly as possible, so that there shall be little delay in sending them out.

This contest will close on Friday, July 5th at 4 o'clock p. m.

Be sure to mail your letter as early as possible. Letters RECEIVED after day and hour of contest cannot be considered in any award.

THE INSIDE OF THE CUP—Winston Churchill

"Sometimes I think that women have no morals," said Eldon Parr bitterly. "At any rate this modern notion of giving them their liberty is sheer folly. Look what they have done with it! Instead of remaining at home, where they belong, they are going out into the world and turning it topsy-turvy. And if a man doesn't let them have a free hand, they get a divorce and marry some idiot who will."

Perhaps no serial story of the present day is attracting more attention than Winston Churchill's newest and most powerful novel, "The Inside of the Cup," now running in Hearst's Magazine.

In the June number John Hodder is brought face to face with the secrets of his rich congregation. The few excerpts from his conversation with Eldon Parr, the great man of his parish, gives a clew to the intense interest the story awakens.

Hodder is calling on Parr, and is taken through the millionaire's house by him. The pastor has recently refused to perform a wedding ceremony between the daughter of a wealthy woman parishioner and the man she has chosen because the daughter has been divorced after an unhappy marriage.

After one of these intervals of silence Eldon Parr looked up from his claret.

"I congratulate you, Hodder, on the stand you took in regard to Constable's daughter," he said.

Exasperation crept into Mr. Parr's voice. "I can't think what's got into women in these times—Mrs. Constable's age they ought to know better. Nothing restrains them. They have reached a point where they don't even respect the Church. And when that happens, it is serious indeed. The Church is the governor on our social engine, and it is supposed to impose a restraint upon the lawless."

Hodder could not refrain from smiling a little at the banker's conception.

"If I have spoken strongly, it is because I feel strongly," he said in a strange, thickened voice.

"Hodder, how would you like to live in this house alone?"

"This poison," Eldon Parr went on solemnly, "has eaten into my own family. My daughter, who might have been a comfort and a companion, since she chose not to marry, was carried away by it, and thought it incumbent upon her to have a career of her own. And now I have a choice of thirty rooms and not a soul to share them with. Sometimes, at night, I make up my mind to sell up, house, [illegible] I can't do it—something holds me back—hope, superstition or whatever you're a mind to call it. You've never seen the house, have you?" he asked.

The rector slowly shook his head, and the movement might have been that he would have used in acquiescence to the odd whim of a child. Mr. Parr led the way up the wide staircase to the corridor above, traversing chamber after chamber, turning off the lights.

"These were my wife's rooms," he said; "they are just as she left them. And these my daughter Alison's, when she chooses to pay me a visit. I didn't realize that I should have to spend the last years of my life alone. I've got a boy, Hodder—I don't know whether I've ever spoken of him to you—Preston. He's gone away, too. But I've always had the hope that he might come back and get decently married and live here. That's why I stay. I'll show you his picture."

They climbed to the third floor, and while Mr. Parr was searching for the electric switch, a lightning flash broke over the forests of the park, momentarily revealing the room. It was a boy's room, hung with photographs of school and college crews and teams and groups of intimates, with deep window seats, and draped pennons of Harvard University over the door; and that our relationship had become impossible that she had no doubt it was largely her fault, but that was the way she was made, and she couldn't change. She had, naturally, an affection for me as her father, but in no very plain we couldn't get along together; she was convinced that she had a right to individual freedom—as she spoke of it—to deve[illegible] herself. She had continued to live with me on the terms I demanded, that her character would deteriorate. Certain kinds of sacrifice she was capable of, she thought, but what I asked would be a useless one. Perhaps I didn't realize it, but it was slavery. Slavery," he repeated, "the kind of slavery her mother had lived."

He took a turn around the room.

"So far as money was concerned, she was indifferent to it. She had enough from her mother to last until she began to make more. It there was a determined look in her eyes when she kissed me as I left for the office. I spent a miserable day. More than once I made up my mind to go home, but [illegible] stopped me. I [illegible] didn't thing she meant what she said. When I got back to the house in the afternoon she had left for New York a [illegible]

"Then I began to look forward to the time when her money would give out. She went to Paris with another young woman and studied there and then to England. She came back to New York, hired an apartment and a studio, and has made a failure [illegible] is a record that would lead one to believe that he might some time have voted for Roosevelt. Such is not the case, however, as Louis prides himself on his Democracy.

None of the Sullivan family will start in the race, however. Louis has a couple of sturdy sprinters that captured medals at the Dorchester [illegible] games, but lost there by so small a margin that they were stacked, the young Sullivans will watch the race from the start and finish.

A great believer in outdoor exercise Louis H. is running the long distance road race for boys in order to encourage interest in the endurance grinds. The course which has been mapped out is of such a character that it will put severe[illegible] the runners. It will still take in enough of Dorchester to permit a great majority of the residents to watch the fun.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS

John Hodder gives up a promising legal career to become an Episcopal clergyman and soon afterward is called from a small New England Parish to the rectorship of St John's, a wealthy, ultra-conservative congregation in a large city in the Middle West. The new rector, who has always accepted unquestioningly the orthodox faith in his church, is not a man to pander to the tastes of a wealthy and conservative flock for policy's sake; he has plans for redeeming the slums, for relieving poverty. The reception he receives is somewhat bewildering. He wonders whether these people really wish achievements from their rector. Eldon Parr, the pillar of the church, tells him that poverty is inevitable; that the weak always sink.

fireplace, Eldon Parr turned to one of the groups on the wall, the earliest taken at school.

"There he is," he said, pointing out a sunny little face at the bottom, a boy of twelve, bareheaded, with short, cropped yellow hair, smiling lips and laughing eyes.

"And here he is again," indicating another group. Thus he traced him through succeeding years until they came to those of college.

"He got into scrape after scrape at Harvard, and later he came within an ace of marrying a woman. He's my weakness today. I can say he is everybody in the world but to him.

"Once I thought I had him started straight, and then a woman came along—off the streets, or little better. He insisted on marrying her and wrecking his life and when I got her out of the way, as any father would have done, he left me. He has never forgiven me. Most of the time I haven't even the satisfaction of knowing where he is—London, Paris or New York. I try not to think of what he does. I ought to cut him off—I can't do it, I can't do it, Hodder—he's my one weakness still.

"With Alison it was different," he said, "I never understood her—even when she was a child.

"It came into Alison's head that she wanted to 'make something of her life,' as she expressed it. She said she was wasting herself, and began going to lectures with a lot of faddish women, became saturated with these nonsensical ideas about her sex that are doing so much harm nowadays. I suppose I was wrong in my treatment from the first. I never knew how to handle her, but we 'grew like flint and steel.

"And one morning, when she was late to breakfast, I delivered an ultimatum. I gave her a lecture on a woman's place and a woman's duty, and told her that if she didn't marry she'd have to stay here and live quietly with me or I'd disinherit her."

Hodder had become absorbed in the portrait of Alison Parr, drawn by her father with such unconscious vividness.

"And then?" he asked.

In spite of the tone of bitterness in which he had spoken, Eldon Parr smiled. It was a reluctant tribute to his daughter.

"I got an ultimatum in return," he said. "Alison chose her own a man." [illegible] anger mounted quickly as he recalled the scene. "She said she had thought it all out; she didn't love the man, but she was going to marry him, and if I refused to give her her share of her mother's money she would get it by law. She was of age, and I had no power to prevent her. She was quite capable of doing it, and I knew it. I gave in. I had to. I've never seen her since."

500 BOYS RACE IN DORCHESTER JULY 4

Every Lad with Two Strong Legs in Contest, or Wants to Be,—

If there is a boy under fourteen who has not entered for the Sullivan road race on July Fourth in Dorchester, it is because he is sick in bed or hasn't got two strong legs.

Every youthful sprinter and long distance flyer in the army of boys that sent in his entry, and practice spins over it [illegible] or marathons or whatever kind of paved streets Dorchester boasts, has been in order since the schools closed for the Summer vacation.

More than 500 boys will toe the mark when Louis Sullivan, promoter of the race, starts the youthful Tom Loughrans on the four mile grind. It's a long run for the boy athletes, but the doctors who will examine the lads, as in the big races, will not permit any boy to start who hasn't enough vitality stored up in his system to go the distance.

Sullivan gives all the prizes, Sullivan [illegible] the race and Sullivan is the hero of the Dorchester kids. The race will start and finish at the headquarters of the Dorchester Catholic Club.

Who's Sullivan, you ask? Sullivan is the father of eight husky children, and claims the distinction of being the youngest grandfather in the State, thirty-seven years old, the father of eight and grandfather of one, not to mention being a future in-law, is a record that would lead one to believe that he might some time have voted for Roosevelt. Such is not the case, however, as Louis prides himself on his Democracy.

None of the Sullivan family will start in the race, however. Louis has a couple of sturdy sprinters that captured medals at the Dorchester [illegible] games, but lost there by so small a margin that they were stacked, the young Sullivans will watch the race from the start and finish.

A great believer in outdoor exercise Louis H. is running the long distance road race for boys in order to encourage interest in the endurance grinds. The course which has been mapped out is of such a character that it will put severe[illegible] the runners. It will still take in enough of Dorchester to permit a great majority of the residents to watch the fun.

FAST WORK ON FAIR AT SAN FRANCISCO

New Record for Rapid Construction for Great Panama Exposition.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 22.—Thirty months before the date set for its formal opening the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in the opinion of competent world's fair managers overshadows anything of its kind and class in the history of commemorative and instructive exhibitions.

The influence of the world in the Panama exposition [illegible] surpassed the anticipations of the exposition managers and surely San Francisco may feel confident that its promise to the nation will be carried out.

This was the promise: The Panama Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915, will be a $50,000,000 exposition. The [illegible] known, worthy of the city, the State and the nation worthy of the great event it is to commemorate." The promise was made when California offered every resource that lay at her command should the nation select San Francisco to act as host to the world in 1915.

A delegation of young women headed by Mary Sullivan, Annie Sullivan, Catherine McCarthy, Mary Costello and Minnie Furey of the Cathedral parish will go to Hudson next Saturday to take part in a reception in honor of Rev. John T. Mullen, D. C. L., pastor of St. Michael's Church of that town. A lawn fete will be held on the grounds adjoining the church. The local committee has prepared an unusual program of entertainment. Father Mullen was for a few years ago rector of the cathedral of the Holy Cross and had charge of the young women's sodality.

A German Beauty off to Conquer Paris!

How Fraulein Fritzi Wagner Plans to Wrest The Throne from the Fickle French Capital's Queens of Loveliness

The Classic Profile of Fraulein Fritzi Wagner, the German Beauty

PARIS is the paradise of women. It is the city where beauty, charm, talent, impudence or any feminine quality whatever receives the highest reward.

Paris has raved over beauty from nearly every corner of the earth—beauty from England, beauty from Spain, beauty from Italy, beauty from Greece, beauty from Holland, beauty from Scandinavia, beauty from Bulgaria, beauty from Cambodia.

But up to the present Paris has not raved over beauty from Berlin. Berlin is the headquarters of the hereditary enemy, the capital not merely of Germany, but of Prussia. Berlin incarnates the race that dealt Paris the most cruel blow she ever received, the race that invaded Paris when she was at the height of her luxurious prosperity and forced her to live on horsemeat for a time.

Consequently an artist from Berlin has been the one thing that Paris could not endure. There have perhaps been successful actresses of German birth on the Parisian stage, but they have concealed the fact by calling themselves Alsatians or Belgians or Austrians—anything but Prussians from Berlin.

Now a brave German girl is going to Paris to try to conquer this ancient prejudice. She makes no secret of her place of origin, for she has made her great success at the Residenz Theatre, Berlin.

This German invader is Fraulein Fritzi Wagner. See her picture and judge whether she is likely to overcome the prejudices and win the admiration of beauty-loving Frenchmen.

Fritzi Wagner has features of classical purity. Her profile would have delighted a Greek sculptor. During the past year no woman's face has been so much photographed in Berlin, and no other woman's photographs have sold so hugely. Artists, too, have eagerly sought for the privilege of painting her portrait.

No woman of such strikingly regular beauty is now prominent on the Paris stage. Paris, as a rule, does not ask for that kind of beauty. Paris demands dash, daring, wickedness, eccentricity—anything but regularity. Still, Fritzi Wagner may win because there is no one just like her.

Among the rivals she will seek to outshine are the saucy Gaby Deslys, the dainty Monna Delza, the voluptuous Tortola Valencia, the exquisite Greuze, the demure Martyl and the refined Renouardt.

No woman in recent years has won quite such a place in the Parisians' hearts as the unhappy Lantelme. Her chief attraction lay in her great, sad eyes, wistful eyes, that seemed to mirror some terrible sorrow. Every prize was hers—wealth, fame, houses, jewels, yachts, horses and a millionaire husband. At the height of her celebrity she fell into the River Rhine and was drowned.

Lantelme was the daughter of a Polish janitor, and her case is an illustration of the very cosmopolitan taste of the Parisians in beauty.

Few have been more warmly welcomed than Tortola Valencia, the Spanish dancer. She incarnates the fiery, voluptuous type of beauty of Spain.

Gaby Deslys represents the saucy, slangy style of the native-born Parisian. She is not a beauty, but she is daring to the limit.

Mme. Regina Badet has made a brilliant success by her Greek dances and Greek impersonations. But her figure, though very pleasing in many respects, is too opulent to fulfill Greek ideals. The true connoisseur in Greek figures will demand a harder and finer outline.

Each one of these actresses has some remarkable attraction. Not one of them, however, possesses the classical purity of outline which nature and her German ancestry have given to Fraulein Fritzi Wagner.

That is why she expects to win the crown of beauty for a brief period from the fickle Parisian public.

Some Simple Yet Scientific Rules for the CURE of LAZINESS

LAZINESS what is, to cure it? Some [illegible] In fact [illegible] scientific men [illegible] are now agreed that in most cases [illegible] proven to be due to some defect of physical and the mental, make-up of mankind.

There was once a time when laziness [illegible] ness could not be cured. It was [illegible] and of the [illegible] was said "Sloth [illegible] most incurable of ills, the only remedy [illegible] being work and work is exactly [illegible] slothful are happy."

But all this is changed. Professors [illegible] French hospital "La Salpetriere," [illegible] le Charrot have told that slothfulness [illegible] curable. Dr. Maurice de Fleury, a [illegible] etts, is also agreed that this is true.

He contends that the idlers, the [illegible] ly, are susceptible of cure, or [illegible] elleration. These are the persons [illegible] "inspiration" for work; inspiration [illegible] say the faculty which we all have more or less [illegible] cording to the moment of realizing our thoughts [illegible] furally, without effort, of working easily, with the plenitude of our mental power.

Some FOODS Will INCREASE LAZINESS, and Others Will Help Cure It

There are idlers in the streets waiting for a chance to carry a handbag and idlers in the libraries incapable of great momentary efforts, but [illegible] ably, the type of mental laziness [illegible] therefore to change those elementary impulses [illegible] are most exhausting, but give only partial results [illegible] regular moderate labor without fatigue.

The examples of great men who have extracted a gigantic life-work from a grudging brain speak with telling effect in strengthening [illegible] had originally a marked taste for [illegible] nervous brain was so rapidly exhausted [illegible] dictate dying down; that Darwin was always [illegible] and most quickly fatigued of men [illegible] accomplishments cured "Insanidia" [illegible] press that inaction which so often [illegible] lies at the root of laziness.

It is for this reason that, accompanying [illegible] equation, which makes the hour short and [illegible] nervous system in a satisfied state.

In many cases the idler is a neuropath, [illegible] the symptoms of neurasthenia is [illegible] prolonged work. This "fast-unable malady" is an exhaustion of the cerebral cell, with fatigue of the entire organism. It is therefore logical to apply to sloth the rational treatment of neurasthenia.

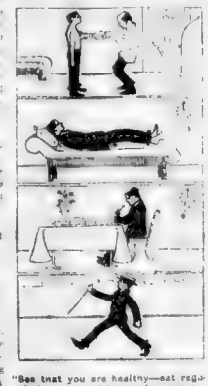
This is the course to [illegible]

First—Regulate, as the monks do, the employment of the twenty-four hours [illegible] condition of intellectual peace, giving the mind the great power derived from self-discipline.

Second—Subject the patient to an alimentary regimen in order to get rid of the weight in the stomach, consecutive pressure sleepiness after meals, and alternations of cerebral excitement and depression, which are caused by slow digestion. Men of leisure will are frequently men of slow digestion also, besides the mind of anybody who has a red face on leaving the table, breathes short, and feels a burning sensation in the [illegible] will be cloudy and confused.

Third—Regular sleep, without nightmare dreams, the sleep that [illegible]

Fourth—It is important to procure such [illegible] as will progressively [illegible] the normal energy [illegible] tension in the muscles, giving vigor at the disposal and command of the



"See that you are healthy—eat regularly, rest mid-day, and exercise daily if you would be cured of laziness."

The indolent person going to the physician generally has no leisure for the open air cure, but must be treated where he is, and especially with the prescription of a course of daily action.

From half past eight—Breakfast; reading of newspapers and letters.

Ten o'clock—Work again an hour and a half.

Half-past eleven—Rest.

Noon—Luncheon, but in an hour's rest, and three-quarters of an hour's walk.

Afternoon—Devote to ordinary occupations, visits, business matters.

Insomnia often comes from lack of mental activity in daytime.

If the patient has been nervous for a long time, especially if the digestion is bad, let him take heed of a food regimen.

Injurious foods—Fresh bread, soups, sauces, spiced dishes, high game, heavy fish, artichokes, raw salads, acid sides, vinegar, tomatoes, fatty foods, fried foods, cabbage, cauliflower, asparagus, sweets, pastry, milk foods, raw fruit (except peaches and grapes).

Foods recommended—Toasted bread, cold, grated meat of bread, eggs, lean ham, lean fish, white and red meats broiled or roasted, rather rare, in moderate quantity; purees of green peas, dry peas, lentils, potatoes, purees of cooked salad (cress, celery and lettuce), endive and celery. For dessert, crackers, preserves, not too sweet; ripe peaches and grapes, Gruyere cheese. Do not season highly.

The animal must be put in good condition for mental work. Darwin was certainly a neuropath but absorbed by the idea of the origin of species was enabled to accomplish an enormous amount of work owing to his habits of labor. A great man differs from a neuropath only in that his fixed idea is noble and his habits are excellent. He does not waste or destroy his strength, all his energies are utilized with uniformity and perseverance toward a special object. In life it is frequently possible to substitute a fixed idea for an absurd obsession and excellent habits for miserable whims. This is the psychological treatment of laziness.

To constrain a feeble brain to the obsession of a good idea is not a superhuman labor for one who goes about it adroitly. Help your friend or patient to choose an employment really in conformity with his vocation—embellish the idea with every gem of hope that can be dug on it: contentment with one's self, wordly importance, fame and fortune to be won. Talk of it constantly. When the idea has become dear, when the brain loves it as a man loves a woman, let it be understood that the idea may be taken up by someone else if he does not hasten. This is the way to utilize our faults, vanity and jealously, and help on the fixed idea to success.

Once the idler sees his way to his work help him to make it his. Define each step so that he can no more be lale and lazy, but must work patiently and continuously at the accomplishment of his task. This is the essential part of the mind cure. Let him be led to fix a habit of labor and the problem is solved for all time.

If you would cure yourself of laziness see that you are physically well. Expend your energy, not in words, but in action. Do not mistake meditation for doing. The mind is no more made for meditation than a ship is for sailing forever the sea. A ship is intended to carry men and wares safely into port. The mind is made not to wander or stagnate in meditation, but to put every thought into actuality. Men must do things and feel that day lost, that sees nothing accomplished. Make every day count by systematic endeavor to work not to think about working. That is the cure for laziness.

Why a BATH Is BENEFICIAL

NOT long ago an English physician [illegible] was also a gentleman of title "across the pond," is reported to have advised his countrymen against bathing, mostly because bathing does not remove germs from the skin. Now we learn by way of Paris, that a Japanese [illegible] Tadaka, declares bathing to [illegible] does not remove germs, but is also a waste of time. Maybe it is, in Japan. This country are perhaps exceptional, also, [illegible] are many doctors who would disagree with these.

As a matter of course people don't bathe for the especial purpose of [illegible] thing germs. If that were the case, [illegible] antiseptic solutions would have to be used. A moderate amount of germs will not hurt anybody.

Indeed, a good many kinds of [illegible] really essential to health, and we couldn't possibly get along without them; only a small proportion produce disease. Not might it well condemn bath, because it doesn't remove boils or cure [illegible] mumps.

What people really bathe for is to remove ordinary, visible dirt, and unobjectionable perspiration; and to get the pleasant and health ful feeling that comes from [illegible] water itself and from the towel after [illegible]

Was it long ago that [illegible] lost is to keep the delicate sebaceous [illegible] glands working well and to [illegible] the [illegible] of oil to the surface of the body [illegible] to coat sea of blood in the [illegible] and ought to be kept [illegible] well [illegible] will be good by [illegible] the internal organs and every place in the body.

The practice of bathing should be begun well [illegible], and never left off. A tepid water tub every morning, and wash down with soap once a week. Twenty minutes is long enough for any bath. A cool plunge bath, with a good reaction; but this is only for the strong and those accustomed to it.

How far we are backward regarding the bath! [illegible] was when all Yale University could not boast a single bath tub. There was only one bath tub in all Bellevue Hospital, whereas today almost every patient is given a bath. Those were the days when a good citizen boasted he bathed regularly, every Fourth of July, whether he needed it or not. People bathed less then and died earlier.

Why Your EYES Are BLUE or BROWN

AMONG the many conditions in which children resemble or differ from their parents in appearance there is no particular in which this is more noticeable than the color of the eyes. The fact that the child of blue-eyed parents has brown eyes has at times given rise to much disquietude. It has also been noticed that the child of brown-eyed parents is very rarely blue-eyed, but the causes for this are not always understood.

Strictly speaking, there is no such thing as an eye of a blue or gray color. Recent discoveries show that eyes which appear gray or blue are merely those which have little or no brown in them, for if there is any it will immediately appear in the iris of the eye. The blue color of the non-brown eye is of the same character as the blue of the sea or of the sky, both of which are due to transparency and diffusion. The interior of the eye is liquid and its surface is convex, which gives an appearance of greater depth, so that the effect is that of blueness. The existence of brown is positive, the blueness or absence of blue is negative, so that the influence of brown is always stronger than that of blue.

Supposing for the time being that a blue-eyed husband and a blue-eyed wife, each the daughter and son respectively of blue-eyed parents should have two children, these two, the son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Blue would both have blue eyes. Suppose again that the children married similar blue-eyed persons. It is evident that the blue eyes would continue indefinitely. Again, suppose that a Mr. and Mrs. Brown, each of brown-eyed parents should have children, the children would have brown eyes.

If, however, one of the young Blues should marry one of the young Browns, their children would be both brown-eyed not one blue and the other brown, as might be expected. This is because the brown is the stronger or dominant color of the eye. If, however, these children again should marry others whose parents have had been of the same kind, it would appear that the two children of Young Blue and Young Brown, although their eyes might appear alike (both being brown) would not be alike, for in the succeeding four children three would have brown eyes, but one would have blue. And if the matter were carried a generation further it would be found that the blue would persist. If married to blue, but also that the third child would not transmit the brown if married to blue, although the first and second would do so invariably.

There are thus eight grandparents to be considered definitely in the question of the color that a child's eyes shall be, presuming that each of these great-grandparents came from evenly-divided families. Should there have been larger or smaller families than the two the factor might be slightly changed, but in general it would have been the same. There is just a remote possibility that the child of two light brown-eyed parents might be blue-eyed in the event that three of the grandparents had been blue-eyed, but in no other case. Brown-eyed children however, may be born of blue-eyed parents, if even as far back as the fourth generation any one of the eight grandparents had brown eyes. This recent determination into the laws of Mendelianism has already been used once in the courts of Europe in a discussion as to the paternity of a child.

Reasons Why CITY FOLKS Are Becoming DEAF

THE rapid increase in deafness that is reported in New York, Chicago and other large American cities is also a present [illegible] problem. Already the many [illegible] of warning devices, such as bells and gongs for street cars, [illegible] for automobiles and bells for telephones are found necessary to increase the volume of the noise made. This is, of course, a vicious circle, because each noise is increased it adds more to the clamor and noise, and it follows that a sound which is to be heard clearly above other sounds must be louder still.

Another cause of hearing failure is the [illegible] that governs acuteness of all senses, namely, that it develops, as there is need for [illegible]. Accordingly primitive man, who depended for [illegible] upon the [illegible] he stalked or for his life [illegible] the approach of the beast that was stalking him, had marvelously acute sense of hearing. Now, [illegible] this, he was able to prick his ears so that the sound out from the head in a position better adapted for hearing.

The pricking of the ears not only added greatly to the reception of the sound by the ear but also has the effect of tightening the tissue surrounding the drum of the ear, thus increasing the tension and making it more sensitive to the vibrations of the air which are called sounds. The muscles for this purpose still are to be found in every human ear, but only in a [illegible] are they strong enough to move the [illegible] movement to be seen. Nevertheless [illegible] effort to prick the ear be made it [illegible] existance of the muscles by a slight [illegible] during the attempt, which shows vitality still to exist in the disused muscle.

On the other hand, the lack of the need to hear faint sounds leads to the loss of the power to do so. A city man cannot tell the sound of a twig snapping in the woods, nor of an animal's footfall pattering on the [illegible], and still less could he place the direction of such [illegible], but there is no need for him to do so. His [illegible] energy is used in other ways. As his ability to [illegible] faintly decreases so does it become constantly [illegible] necessary to increase the volume of the sound he is expected to hear.

A similar loss of keenness with regard to eyesight has [illegible] necessity of wearing eyeglasses of various [illegible] of the eye may be adjusted to the difficulty [illegible] need to see. It seems probable [illegible] may [illegible] ed to be mechanically assisted [illegible] power of hearing whereupon the ear trumpet [illegible] to be regarded as being almost as much a [illegible] as spectacles. The ear appliance need not be [illegible] ly and would render it possible for the noises of the city to be only half as loud as they are now, for people of normal hearing could distinguish them without [illegible] external aids, and those whose hearing was dull, [illegible] the use of such an instrument, could hear the lesser [illegible] as well as they do the greater noise now.

Effects of COFFEE On Many ANIMALS

THE lower animals, such as cats, dogs, rabbits, goats, pigs and the like, would make very poor "coffee drinkers." In fact, they couldn't drink coffee right along, as mankind does, because after developing all sorts of abnormal conditions they would finally die.

Not long ago some interesting experiments were made at Columbia University that proved coffee increased man's efficiency and [illegible] [illegible] on this page. But experiments with the lower animals as to the effect caffein has upon them have just been reported by the Bureau of Chemistry in the Government Department of Agriculture, and all these experiments show that caffein, that element of coffee that increased man's efficiency when taken in coffee, will do almost everything to these animals from getting them slightly [illegible] to killing them outright.

Rabbits, pigs, dogs, goats, cats, kittens, guinea pigs, pigeons, frogs are animals and fowl were all [illegible] felix. A very little caffein, about [illegible] teenth of a gram, caused symptoms of [illegible] cation in a rabbit. It was found that [illegible] bits, like mammals, differ greatly in [illegible] physical make-up, and this same amount [illegible] caffein that caused intoxication in one rabbit killed another.

When a third of a gram of caffein was given guinea pigs, two of them were in convulsions within half an hour and died while in the third tetanus, or lockjaw, set in, resulting fatally two and a half hours later.

Cats, with their proverbial "nine lives," can stand a little more caffein than dogs or guinea pigs, but the experiments show that it finally causes paralysis and at the end of two days the strongest of the cats was found dead. Dogs and, in fact, all the animals experimented upon were affected by the caffein, it seeming to have toxic qualities in each instance. Dogs could take more of it, and one somewhat remarkable thing noted was that kittens could stand more of the caffein than cats.

Of the greatest value, perhaps, in these experiments, was the discovery that caffein was not a cumulative poison—that is, if administered for caffein a long while, that is, small quantities of caffein a day—it was driven entirely out of the system and [illegible] accumulating, as with arsenic, until [illegible] so much is lodged in the system that death results.

Curious Things About Consumption

VERY fat people and very thin people are more likely to have consumption than people of [illegible] average weight. If your brothers or sisters have consumption, your chances are against exposure. If your father lingered along with consumption, or your mother died of consumption, there is danger that you may get consumption. But if your father and mother both died of consumption when you were very young, you have a good chance of not getting the disease.

The reason for all this is that people do not inherit consumption, but acquire the tubercular germs from association with people who have consumption. That is the reason why any sick brothers or sisters in the house are likely to convey the disease to you. It is the reason why one of your parents, lingering along through many years of the disease, is likely to spread to other members of the family—but if this parent, or both parents, die of consumption while you are very young, you have been spared the long years of possible infection.

The more the scientists study the subject of tuberculosis, the more they are convinced that it is a disease of poor food and poor nourishment. It has been repeatedly asserted that there is no excuse for a rich man having consumption in his family. The cure for this disease is plenty of good food rather than fresh air.

How SPOONS May Spread DISEASE

THROUGH educating the public and the the recent passing of laws in many States, those dangerous germ spreaders, the common drinking cup, the nasty roll towel, and the dish cloth, have been abolished.

But there still remain many dangerous customs and disease-breeding utensils in house holds and tenements which are a menace to the public health. The most prolific method of carrying disease from one person to another is through the tasting spoon.

By this I mean that common custom of cook or housekeeper of dipping out with a spoon a taste or two of the soup, sauce or whatever is cooking. Every few minutes this spoon goes from lips to soup and from soup to lips. Now every one carries germs of some kind upon their gums, tongue or throat. They may be comparatively harmless germs to those using the spoon, yet when transferred to another person, especially children, cause any affection from inflamed gums to acute tonsilitis. A person may have latent germs of diphtheria, the germs of a much more horrible disease, or even those causing consumption, which upon reaching a more susceptible individual will at once spring forth into the active disease. For remember that what is one person running only a slumbering disease will in another person become an active disease.

No matter who the cook is, a good mother or a hired [illegible], the use of the tasting spoon should [illegible] stopped. The best way out of the dilemma is to take the tasting quantity in a spoon and drop it into a [illegible]. Then the [illegible] should be [illegible] boiled in boiling water. The same process should [illegible] be used in everything tasted. That is NEVER should the spoon or [illegible] go from mouth to cooking food. I know of a recent case where a little girl of ten years has contracted a very serious disease because the new cook after tasting some pudding sauce took the spoon direct from her diseased mouth and, dipping it again into the sauce, gave a spoonful to the waiting [illegible].

Then there is the habit with some mothers of trying to show their child that the medicine is not "nasty tasting," by first taking a little themselves. Now these mothers may be free from any disease, they may have the new germs of tonsilitis in their throat—you can never tell about these important matters—but they run the great danger of transferring a lot of germs to the tender mucous membrane of the child's lips or throat.

A great many discoveries concerning the dangers that come from careless use of spoons, but only in the home, but more especially [illegible] places like restaurants cafes [illegible] soda fountains [illegible] are rapidly [illegible] roads, the same astounding cases are found [illegible] where [illegible] and some [illegible] death [illegible] is believed to have resulted solely from [illegible] germs by means of unhygienic use [illegible] common spoon.

[illegible] and at bars and soda fountains, [illegible] are sadly thrust into a glass of [illegible] has been used [illegible] and over [illegible] bear the [illegible] and [illegible] have put in [illegible] so sticky that [illegible] will not remove the [illegible] and [illegible] dirt [illegible] from person to [illegible].

The old mother's habit of examining her child's throat by pressing down its tongue with the handle of a spoon is also a dangerous thing to do. Presumable she does not do this unless the child complains of a sore throat. This sore throat may mean a lot. Even if she washes the spoon immediately after it is not really sterilized. It takes boiling water to do this and with some germs a scrupulous.

At every druggist can be bought, for a few cents, a glass tongue depressor, or even little wooden ones, which once used should be immediately thrown into the fire.

It is knowledge and care in these little but important matters which make all the difference between health and disease.

How to Get Rid of Water Bugs

COCKROACHES and croton bugs—commonly called water bugs, on account of their fondness for moist places—are certainly a [illegible] of insect pests and also one of the hardest to get rid of. No city apartment is free from the danger of them for if, through lack of care, they gain a foothold in one apartment they will multiply rapidly and spread throughout the entire building.

These insects feed upon a variety of vegetable and animal matter and are most frequently found in the vicinity of water pipes. According to Dr. E. Porter Felt, the New York State entomologist, the first step in a successful campaign against them should be to eliminate, so far as possible, their available supply—such as garbage, uncovered food, etc.—and reduce to a minimum the cracks and crevices in which they may shelter.

If any room which is badly infested can be made moderately tight, it should be thoroughly fumigated at the outset. To fumigate burn a sulphur candle in a small room or two candles in a large room—any drug store has sulphur candles. This fumigation should be supplemented by the persistent use of some roach poison, preferably one which is not dangerous to domestic animals or human beings.

An effective remedy widely used in Australia is the placing of a dry mixture of one part of plaster of [illegible] and three or four parts of flour near places where moisture is apt to collect.

THE ONLY GIRL WHO EVER BROKE D'ANNUNZIO'S HEART

An Intimate Picture of the Woman "With a Riddle for a Face," Who May Be a Greater Bernhardt

IDA RUBENSTEIN probably is the most interesting theatrical personality in Europe. Paris knew her first, only a few years ago, as a dancer, from Russia, and was captivated. But she presently justified her boundless ambition by exhibiting dramatic talent of the highest order.

D'Annunzio, greatest of modern literary geniuses of the decadent school—spendthrift and dandy, who had broken many feminine hearts, including that of Eleanor Duse, and cynically wrote a novel about it—saw Ida Rubenstein and threw himself at her feet. For her he wrote his tragic masterpiece, "St. Sebastien," while attacking the citadel of her heart with all his acquired skill. She produced his tragedy, brilliantly, and then coldly turned her back upon him—the only woman who had successfully resisted D'Annunzio—the first to break his heart.

By ALAN DALE

Paris, June 1

VERSAILLES, that once sheltered poor Marie Antoinette before she lost her head, now shelters the enigmatic, mysterious actress-dancer known as Ida Rubinstein, who is never likely to lose her head. Versailles, full of memories of the past, leaps into the immediate present as the home of the much discussed Russian, who has blossomed forth into a full-fledged Parisienne. And it is at the Trianon Palace that Mlle Ida Rubinstein abides. (I may add that it is a hotel, because if I didn't, you would probably discover it.)

But, like most Parisian ladies even of Russian birth—Mlle. Rubinstein has what they call a pieds-a-terre (a foothold) in Paris. She may lose herself at Versailles whenever she chooses, but she has a nook here, at No. 82 Rue Vanneau, which she calls her atelier (workshop). You see, I'm translating everything I can for you, out of sheer goodness of heart. Thank goodness, I didn't have to trip out to Versailles, where all the tourists go. I was not obliged to chat to Mlle. Ida amid the atmospheric souvenirs of Marie Antoinette. There is a fitness in everything. She bade me to her atelier at No. 82 Rue Vanneau, and thither went I, filled with curiosity.

Mlle. Rubinstein had just closed an engagement at the Chatelet Theatre in "Helene of Sparta," that ran for six nights only—probably owing to its stupendous success. However, know that she was no poor little struggler-ess, cast down by the non-run of a colossal production. What cared she? Moreover—the king is dead; Long live the King! Mlle Rubinstein is billed to appear in Oscar Wilde's "Salome," in a few weeks to come, with special music, special costumes (or non costumes?) and specially special scenic effects.

I had never seen Ida Rubinstein. "All Paris" has spoken to me of her, and I know her, of course. She is always doing things. Last year when I was in Paris she produced an enormous affair called "The Martyr of St Sebastien," by D'Annunzio, with music by Dubussy, and that, too, seemed too big even for Paris. In fact, Ida Rubinstein is a power here, as women can be when they are odd, or beautiful, or fantastic, or energetic. She produces the best of everything, and if it fails, is she cast down? Not on your life. Jamais, which means never!

They put me in a little elevator, at No. 82 Rue Vanneau, and told me that it would stop all by itself at Mlle. Rubinstein's atelier on the sixth floor. I hate those elevatorsminus elevator boy. They move as though they never wanted to get anywhere—or intended to get anywhere—and there you are locked in, and powerless. As I was enclosed in this personal ascenseur I said goodby to myself and shut my eyes. When I awoke it seemed an hour after. I was at the sixth floor, at the open door of Mlle Rubinstein's atelier.

There she stood, in a narrow gray satin skirt, so tight that it showed every line of her figure. A hat with one of those backward feathers that look like the rudders of boats added to her height, and she wore a veil, well over her face. It was a curious riddle of a face. She was livid—almost green. The whiteness of her skin gleamed strangely. Her lips, scarlet, like a wound, gave one an odd sensation of mingled fascination and repulsion. Two dark eyes pierced the veil. Mlle. Rubinstein looked pensive, distraite, and exceedingly sad. Her hands, with the long, tapering fingers, were unadorned by a single jewel. A single diamond glistened among the laces on her unemotional breast. She was a remarkable figure, and the sight of her oppressed me vaguely. I felt I should never be able to "make conversation." "Words failed me—which is unusual.

She stood there in her immense studio, lighted from above (the studio, not Mlle. Rubinstein). It was a colossal apartment, with a slippery floor. At one end was a raised platform, red-carpeted and railed. A few books, yellow-bound, graced a shelf. It was all very cold and systematic. A few minutes (probably seconds) later, she smiled. If the Sphinx could smile, it would smile exactly as Mlle. Ida Rubinstein did.

"I practise the dance here," she said apologetically, in perfect English—almost the English of an Englishwoman—"although I live at Versailles."

Her voice, though low and well modulated, echoed through the room. I could not imagine her practising dancing anywhere. She seemed so languid. Presently she sank upon a sofa and looked at me through her veil and half-closed eyes. A tiny little dog, the cutest, tiniest spaniel I have ever seen, dashed into the room and, doggily, begged me to take him on my lap. The little dog broke the ice. Mlle. Rubinstein broke into a human smile as I fondled the dog.

"That is Cora," she said, with a semblance of animation. "Isn't she a dear? I have fifty dogs at my home in Versailles, and, above all, I have a leopard, that I acquired in Africa. I love my leopard better than anything, but I cannot bring it to Paris, because it is savage. Cora is the only pet I have here."

At any rate, I had made a hit with Cora. She nestled in my arms and never even loooked at Mlle. Rubinstein, who still lay on the sofa in apparent fatigue.

"Paris is so frivolous," she said presently, after I had lured her from a veritable jungle of monosyllables. She had said "Yes" and "No" so often that I had begun to despair of her, and had nearly given her up when, somehow or other, she seemed to spring into life. She lifted up her veil, and her white face looked whiter, her red lips redder, and her dark eyes darker.

"Paris is so frivolous," she repeated, "that sometimes I think it is above its head. My beautiful production of 'Helene of Sparta' quite magnificent, and I was Helene—has closed. The same thing happened with 'The Martyr of St. Sebastien.' Does drama affect Paris was jealous of D'Annunzio—it was the first time he had ever written a French—and they were afraid. It was said he wrote bad French, and other absurdities like that. He had always written in Italian—I had even translated. Oh, D'Annunzio is wonderful. His books could be dramatized, but he will not permit it. He prefers to be his own master. In the future, I think I would write plays instead of novels. He has acquired a taste for it. But Paris is so frivolous!"

She looked at me [illegible] seemed drab in the fading light, but the little warm body of Cora was a comfort to me.

"You know that they want [illegible] Paris," she went on. "The public will not tolerate him. Oh, yes—Nora' they do tolerate because it is so easy. The other plays will not tolerate. And Strindberg—they do not know him here. I once saw 'The Father' in St. Petersburg. It is very dreadful, too dreadful for Paris. [illegible] the time. Then Paris must dine, and Paris must sup, and the theatres must not bore her with that I am going to produce 'Salome,' the one-act play, and it will be good for an entire evening.

She was getting a bit less languorous, but with the best of intentions one could not have called her a merry soul.

"They will diue before they come to see 'Salome,'" she said, and I was [illegible] late, and they will sup when they have seen 'Salome,' and it will end very early—just like that. One dares not be [illegible] appeal, for they are [illegible] Paris.

"What do you wear on [illegible] rather simmerously.

"I have not yet seen [illegible] she said carelessly (and I was hurt). But it will be very beautiful. I have seven [illegible] signed for me. Yes, I dance [illegible] of the Seven Veils, and I [illegible] new. You know we have not finished with 'Salome' in Paris. It is all so wonderful! I consider myself an actress and dancer. I think the dance is a part of the drama. It is an expression of drama. The [illegible] must be dramatic. She cannot [illegible] she has drama in her soul. I love to combine dancing and drama. Yet I love [illegible] at the Boulevard theatres in Paris. They oppress me.

Was it a pose? If so, it was well done. She had not budged from the sofa—her veil was still lifted, but she had ceased to smile.

"They want me to go to America," she said softly. "They want me to act in America, but—it is so far! I have never been there."

I was silent. It is not wise to contradict a lady. Rumor saith that once, a decade ago, Mlle. Ida Rubinstein was in America, [illegible], forsooth! Prate not to me of rumor. If Mlle. Rubinstein wants me to believe that she has never been in America, I'll believe it. That did seem to be her insinuation.

"If I ever go to America," she said, "I want to play drama there in English. I want to play Hedda Gabler, which I love. That is my ambition. Another of my ambitions is to play 'Helene of Sparta' in German in Berlin. Perhaps I shall do it. Then I dance always. If I ever come to America I shall dance as well. But you see, I speak English. When I was a little girl I had an English governess in Russia and I spoke even better than I do now. We are all linguists in Russia."

"Do you know Yvette Guilbert?" Suzanova, who has made a hit in America, playing in [illegible] it."

She looked at me [illegible] I never heard of her," she said [illegible] not have been famous in Russia, or [illegible] Russian actress, now dead or [illegible] New York and played there in Russian. She was not a success. So, I do not know [illegible]. Do they like Ibsen in America?

I gave her a brief—frightfully brief—history of Ibsen in the United States. She listened with closed eyes, or at least I fancied that she listened. Perhaps she didn't. In any case, I do not think that a career in U. S. A is of vast importance to her. She makes her magnificent product [illegible] in Paris, and if they fail she does not worry. Her look of profound melancholy is [illegible] habitual.

Cora barked and jumped from my lap. I felt that I could [illegible] but oppressive studio any longer without Cora. Mlle. Ida Rubinstein sat up and addressed some endearing epithets to Cora. Yet it is little dog did not go to her. It capered round and round the room. Mlle. Ida laughed aloud for the first time. The dog amused her. [illegible]

She showed me pictures of "The Martyr of [illegible] and [illegible] the walls of the atelier. She had two hundred of them, which to select her ideal [illegible] of experiments. She paced about the atelier restlessly, trailing her [illegible] on the polished floor. Her veil [illegible] I shivered slightly [illegible] and moved toward the door.

Alone in the [illegible] elevator, I breathed a sigh of relief. I [illegible] Mlle. Ida Rubinstein, though [illegible] because her English was so perfect.

Sherlock Holmes Outdone by the New Scientific Detectives—No. 11

By William J. Burns

The Most Famous American Detective.

Detective Wm. J. Burns.

It is, perhaps, not surprising that very wide-spread interest has been aroused by the use of the interesting little scientific instrument called the dictagraph, which I employed in connection with the McNamara dynamiting cases and elsewhere. The dictagraph is only one instance of the usefulness of modern science in detective work. The successful detection of crime has now largelyy passed out of the old system of haphazard guesswork, and is shaping itself along the lines of more strictly scientific study.

The recent progress of the professional criminologist of France and Germany is little understood in America, where very few detectives avail themselves of these new resources of science.

I am making a conservative statement when I say that the actual applications in real life in detective work of the methods of Professor Reiss of the University of Lausanne; Professor Gross, of Germany, and others are often more bewildering to the uninformed than any of the imaginary detective work of Sherlock Holmes.

I am familiar with the work of the foreign detectives, and the records of recent modern scientific detection of crime given here on this page are very striking and instructive examples of how we avail ourselves of the tremendous resources of modern science when the peculiarities of the case require it

This Series Tells To-day How a Great Criminologist Solved a Mystery of Murder Whose Roots Were in Ancient Egypt

This series [illegible] dealing with the work of the [illegible] detectives the [illegible] exploits in real life make the [illegible] entures of Sherlock Holmes [illegible] seem amateurish, detailed last week in Case IV the remarkable [illegible] who thought he had eaten his [illegible] How Dr. Masaryk, the famous [illegible] criminologist, showed that the father, who had confessed the atrocious [illegible] was [illegible] and a victim of suggestion and how he discovered the real murderer through a foot [illegible] a bloody handkerchief and a letter, was [illegible]

After Dr Masaryk had proved to the incredulous Magistrate of Sauerbrunn, the little village where the supposed cannibalism had taken place, the truth of his extraordinary deductions he dwelt upon the importance of the little things in the new science of criminal catching and promised to tell him the astonishing story of a robbery and murder, one of the strangest in the history of crime, whose mystery was revealed through a footprint on the sandy head of the Sphynx and a tiny hole in a statuette of an ancient Egyptian god. This is the story, an actual happening, a real mystery of crime, as told by Dr Masaryk

CASE V: How Dr. Masaryk Unraveled the Murder of the Old Egyptologist by a Footprint on the Head of the Sphynx and a Hole in the Cat Headed Goddess Bast.

"Dr. [illegible] Von Kellermann," said Dr. Masaryk, "was one of the most [illegible] of Egyptologists.

"I had gone to [illegible] for a few weeks in the Winter [illegible] Kellermann, whom I knew well [illegible] Hotel. He was just [illegible] Bubastis, one of [illegible] whose patron goddess [illegible] Headed Bast—a very [illegible], some of whose [illegible] shocking to you. [illegible] two objects from [illegible] to five inches [illegible] bronze, of [illegible] by age [illegible] day. Its [illegible] flat, a two-[illegible] about half [illegible] in diameter and dwindling to a small knob, [illegible] from it. It was curious, and I examined [illegible]. Where the handle merged into the [illegible] of the statuette there was an indentation [illegible] as though a thumb had been placed [illegible] metal before it had cooled. I held the handle and pressed my thumb in this mark. The little image made a half revolution and stopped. I took my thumb away. The image made its half revolution back

It was quite uncanny, my dear Herr, and I looked at Von Kellermann inquiringly

"'A peculiar mechanism that I hope soon to examine more closely,' he said, 'clearly the image was held before the great idol of Bast and the half revolutions had something to do with her worship. But look at this.'

"He [illegible] me one of the most wonderful [illegible] places of ancient Egyptian workmanship [illegible] ever seen. It was made of rectangular links perhaps an inch by half an inch. [illegible] centre of each link was filled with the out[illegible] of an eye, the pupil of each of which was [illegible] ruby.

"Is it any wonder I want to open that tomb properly?' he exclaimed'

"We had a little more talk and I went to bed. About two o'clock I was aroused by a knocking at my door. I found there one of the hotel policemen. 'Please come down,' he said, 'Dr. Von Kellerman is dead'

"'Dead!' I exclaimed. 'Why I left him only a few hours ago in the best of health.'

"'Yes' said the policeman, 'but afterward he went with his dragomen for a night visit to the Sphynx. In climbing to the head he fell. It would seem that he had been bitten by a snake. The fall broke his neck, but the poison made him almost unrecognizable. His man Said, came racing to the hotel and gave us the alarm. It is strange, too, that we found not far away the body of an Arab who also [illegible] have been bitten. The poison had so altered this man as to make him quite unrecognizable.'

"'But I know of no snake around here whose venom would have the effect you describe,' I said

"'Nor we, Monsieur,' said the officer. 'Therefore we desire you'

"I demanded to see the bodies. I found, indeed, my poor friend's almost unrecognizable. I will spare you the details. I had seen such effects produced by the fer de lance, that little tropical bearer of terrible death, but I knew of no poisonous snake about this part of Egypt which would produce them.

"We have strong nerves, we criminologists, my dear Herr, and I examined the body, looking for the tiny puncture, which would mark the snake fang. I found nothing. I made a more minute examination with my glass. The body was greatly swollen. At last I noticed on the chest, above the heart a place that seemed to be more swollen than the surrounding tissue. I examined it more closely. I saw a minute spot, no bigger than a bee sting there. I pressed this carefully, and a tiny drop of blody ichor exuded from it. I sent for my lancets, and with them I opened carefully about this spot, and examined the tissue with my strongest glass.

"I cut clear down to the heart and bared that organ. Running through the flesh of the chest and into the heart, was a minute puncture! The channel of this puncture was four inches long! What snake fang or lethal organ of any serpent or insect, could have produced a puncture of this length! I knew of none. I took specimens of the tissue and of the blood within the heart.

"I next examined the body of the Arab. It was swollen very dreadfully. I found at last on him the same kind of puncture I had discovered in Von Kellermann's body. But this was on the neck, and had run through from side to side.

"I sent for the man Said. He was a tall Arab and seemed deeply moved by his master's death. His story was simple. Von Kellermann, he said, had desired to go out to the Sphynx. It was one of those wonderful moonlight nights one only sees in Egypt. Arriving there Von Kellermann had expressed a desire to climb to the head and look out over the desert. Before they had reached the top, Von Kellermann had given a cry and fallen to the bottom. Said clambered down swiftly and had found him dead. He had rushed back to the hotel for assistance, and when the party had returned they had found the Egyptologist changed as I had seen him. He must have been bitten by a snake, said Said, and that was what made him fall. The party had stumbled across the body of the Arab and had carried him back too. Said had seen no one about the Sphynx when he and the scientist had arrived there, nor had he seen any one after the fall

"I will abbreviate. I led a small party out to the scene of Von Kellermann's death. We took Said with us. I examined under the moonlight, and with our electric torches, the sand where my friend had fallen, and where the Arab had been found. I found a number of footprints—but of that later.

"'Take me to the top by the same route you and your patron climbed,' I said to the Arab. Without an instant's hesitation he started up the flank of the Sphynx and began climbing toward the left ear. I followed him. Above the ear he stopped.

"'He went no further,' he said. 'Go on to the top, I follow,' I commanded. The Arab hesitated for a moment, and then began to climb. I followed. Behind me were two of the men from the hotel. We reached the top, and I ordered these two to hold back with the Arab, while I investigated. Now you must know that the head of the Sphynx is moderately flat, and that the winds keep it covered with sand. In this sand I saw the marks of fresh footprints. Recently there had been four persons there. One had worn German made shoes, the output of Grottner & Co., of Berlin. Another had worn French made shoes, the output of Villet & Co., of Harve. The other two men had been Arabs and barefoot.

"'How could you tell where the shoes were made?' interjected the astonished Magistrate.

"'In a moment,' smiled the criminologist. He continued: "There were plain marks of a struggle, two of them to be exact. I read the marks in the sand, and saw were French shoes had forced German shoes to the very brink of the statue's head. Then there was a horribly significant sliding mark over that brink. On the left side I saw where French shoes and barefeet had grappled with the other barefeet, and again there was the sliding mark. My right hand came into contact with a hard object. I gripped it and drew it out.

"It was the little statue of Bast the Cat Headed, which only a few hours before had been shown me by Dr. Von Kellermann. Only the curious handle was missing. The base of the statuette was flat. I slipped it in my pocket.

"'Let us go,' I said to the party. 'Go first,' I said to one of the police. 'Don't let that Arab get away,' I whispered. 'You next,' I ordered Said. Then the second policeman followed, and I last. At the base of the statue we joined the rest of the party

"'Arrest that man,' I said, pointing to the Arab. 'He is one of the murderers of Dr. Von Kellermann. The Arab gazed at me stoically, and made no resistance.

"'Do you know,' I said, 'a Frenchman, perhaps six feet tall, who has recently come from Havre; he limps, and has the middle finger of his right hand missing?'

"The Arab made an inarticulate sound of fear

"'Why, yes,' said one of the policemen. 'He is at the hotel now. His name is de Lande, but he has not been out of the hotel to-night.'

"'Let us go see Monsieur de Lande,' I said.

"On the way back I examined the statuette I had found, minutely. I discovered in the centre of the base a small hole, less than a sixteenth of an inch in diameter. Something which [illegible] part of the vanished handle [illegible] into this hole. The statuette was hollow. On the bottom, directly under what I have called the thumb print, was a tiny spring. That was all—but it was enough

"We entered the hotel and two policemen went to de Lande's room. He was asleep. He dressed and came down stairs.

"'Monsieur,' I said, 'what made you kill Von Kellermann?' De Lande seemed astounded

"'This must be some strange jest,' he said. 'I have been in the hotel all night'

"'And yet the imprints of your mutilated hand are plain on the sand on the head of the Sphynx,' I said. 'Sometimes, my dear Herr, it is well to play your ace at once.'

"De Lande stormed

"'Let me see the shoes you are wearing,' I said. True enough, they were from Villet & Co., as I had said. I sent for the shoes worn by Dr. Von Kellermann. They were the German make I had [illegible]

"'Monsieur,' I said to the Frenchman, 'you knew it to be true that Professor Von Kellerman had made a notable discovery. Through his dragoman you lured the doctor to the top of the Sphynx. There you threatened him with death unless he revealed his secret. He had no weapons. He took a statuette from his pocket and in the struggle used it as a club. While you were fighting another Arab made his way to the top of the Sphynx. As he did so you wrested the statuette from Von Kellerman's hands. In some way you touched a hidden spring on the handle and found in your hand a dagger with an extraordinarily thin blade. You stabbed the Arab through the neck with this and threw him to the sands.

"'You then stabbed Von Kellerman and threw him off the head, so that it would appear he had fallen. You stole from him an ancient necklace. Search this man!' I ordered of the Police.

"They pulled from a hidden pocket the same necklace, with its strange links and eyes, that my poor friend had shown me a few hours before!

"'Wonderful!' exclaimed the Magistrate

"Yes, perhaps,' said Dr. Masaryk, 'but I was wrong.'

"'Do you mean that the Frenchman didn't kill Dr. Von Kellerman,' asked the Magistrate

"'He killed him,' said Dr. Masaryk, 'but Said had been killed too.

"'But you told me that Said was under arrest,' exclaimed the Magistrate, 'How could that be'

"It was not Said at all,' said Dr. Masaryk. [illegible] his twin brother. What had really happened was this. De Lande had heard of the discovery through Said's brother, who was a worthless, wicked fellow. He had avowed to get from Von Kellerman the secret of the Tomb's location.

"It was not Said, but Said's twin brother, who suggested the journey to the top of the Sphynx, and accompanied Dr. Von Kellerman there.

"'But the snake bites?' said the Magistrate.

"'There were none,' said Dr. Masaryk. 'The dagger of Bast was evidently impregnated with some extremely powerful poison, whose venom had survived the ages. I knew that Said knew what had caused the death when we started to climb the Sphynx.'

"'How do you know that?' said the Magistrate

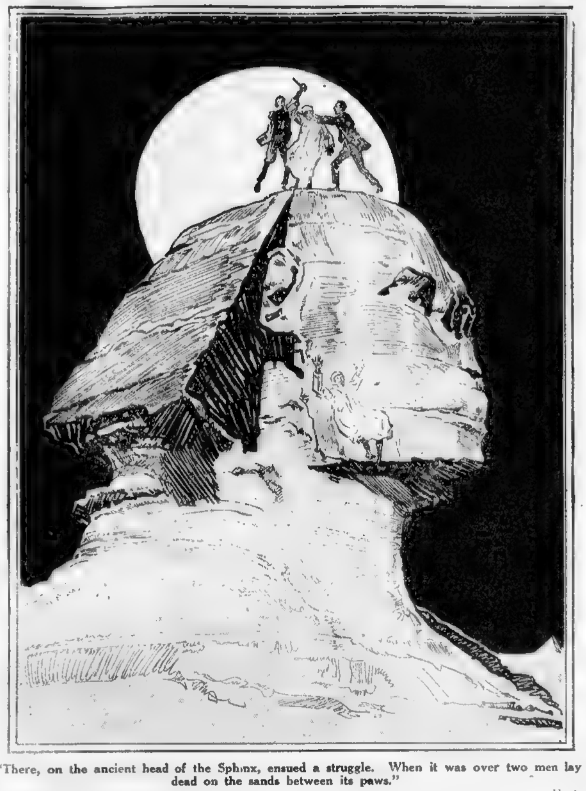
"'If he had believed that there was any venomous snake around he would have shown some hesitation when I asked him to climb up the same route,' said Dr. Masaryk. 'He showed no hesitation until we reached the ear, and I asked him to go on to the top. That told me that the tragedy had occurred on the very head of the Statue.'

"'But how could you describe the shoes?'

"'Easily,' said Dr. Masaryk. 'In the Bertillon Gallery are prints of the soles of shoes made by every shoemaker in the world. Each one had distinctive differences plain to the student of crime. The arrangement of pegs, the numbers of pegs and nails, and shape of the heels, etc., are all different.'

"Of course, the description of the Frenchman was easy from the marks left in the sand. The fact that one footprint was heavier than the other showed me that he limped. I found the marks of his hands plainly imprinted on the sands. I knew it was not an Arab's hand, because there are wide racial differences in shape. I deduced his height from the size of his [illegible] and the length of his stride.

"Both De Lande and Said's brother were executed later for their crime.



"There, on the ancient head of the Sphinx, ensued a struggle. When it was over two men lay dead on the sands between its paws."

A Shrine of Wood for Shakespeare's Works from 60 Things the Bard Made Historic

An absolutely unique piece of furniture has just been offered for sale by Henry Sotheran, the famous dealer in rare books of London.

It is a bookcase entirely composed of pieces of wood from places either associated with Shakespeare in his lifetime or conspicuously mentioned in his works. The pieces were gathered by the late W. C. Prescott, of Boston, who lived in England and made it his life hobby to perfect this bookcase

There are pieces of wood taken from sixty historical buildings such as the Tower of London, Westminster Abbey and Kenilworth Castle. Altogether there are 111 pieces of wood in the case. Mr. Prescott, wherever possible, obtained a certificate of the authenticity of the piece.

An outline diagram of the bookcase is printed herewith, showing its various parts numbered. The key of these numbers follows:

(1) Four frieze tablets, taken from the Middle Temple Hall, where "Twelfth Night" was first played; (2) four frieze blocks from Windsor Castle; four niche heads from Stratford Church; four monograph blocks from Kenilworth Castle; (3) four pilasters from Ely Place; two pilasters from Westminster Abbey.

(8) Six pieces from the Poets' Corner, Westminster Abbey; two brackets to niches from Stratford Church; two panels below the brackets from Greenwich Palace; top of lower portion of the case from the old grammar school, Stratford-on-Avon.

Amusing Sketches by H. Avelot, the French Picture-Making Psychologist, Whose Favorite Subjects Are the Things That Everybody Thinks

HERE comes a picture-making psychologist to turn the average untravelled person's mind inside out and exhibit the images it contains of foreign countries. If you are an untravelled person glance at these pictures and marvel at the artist's accuracy in "hitting off" your unconsciously fixed mental view of Venice, Holland, Africa, the Orient, and so on. Hasn't this picture-maker got the psychology on this subject down pretty fine?

The genius is H. Avelot, whom the Parisians love because of the humorous frankness with which his pencil and brush visualize their foibles. In the present instance he has a lot more than that to say about the average person and his mental failings and visits them in full.

What for example, is the popular idea of Africa? Close your eyes and you'll picture to yourself a large, energetic man in cork helmet, with a rifle under his arm pursuing a bunch of alarmed giraffes. M. Avelot is a Frenchman, and it will be remembered that "T. R." was quite a lion in Paris on his return from Africa.

Now what is your instantaneous, unaided mental picture when South America is mentioned? Has this French artist portrayed it with admirable fidelity? A country where revolutions spring up in the night and are fought to a finish every day in the year. With warships of outside nations popping away peaceably from the ocean horizon, white planters spanking the dark-skinned natives, adventurers digging huge diamonds out of the soil almost anywhere; butterflies as big as aeroplanes, and pink rare Ringtoms and men making love to dusky senoritas—isn't that the idea of it? Or, after all, is it a bit of color across the canvas of your imagination?

A country where roasted fat puppies are served at the best tables, where common offenders against some law go about the streets with their heads stuck through holes in a section of heavy plank, where more serious offenders are publicly sawn in order from head to feet, and are so used to it that they smoke a cheerful pipe of

Three Discoveries that Throw

① Unearthing Older Civilizations Around the Palace Where King Ahab, Who Stole Naboth's Vineyard, Lived With His Wicked Queen Jezebel

The Ruins of the Gate of Ancient Samaria, Through Which Many Conquerors Have Ridden.

NEW and inspiring prospects in the field of archæology are indicated in the recent discovery of fragmentary remains of very ancient civilizations which preceded that of the Israelites in Samaria.

We know from the Bible that the Holy Land was inhabited by various races, the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Horites and others before the Israelites came. The Bible tells us little about these old races, except that they were horribly wicked, for the Bible is not concerned with telling a complete history, but chiefly with that of the Chosen People.

The city of Samaria was at one time the capital of Israel and later the capital of the Northern Kingdom of Israel. Upon the site of this ancient city Dr. Reisner, of the Harvard University expedition, has made a remarkably interesting series of discoveries, throwing light not only upon the Israelites, but upon those who preceded and followed them.

He has found traces of five cities—first a Roman, then below it a Greek, then an Assyrian, then another Israelite and finally a Canaanite city. The remains of the Canaanite period prove that these people were in the habit of sacrificing human victims and children to the hideous worship of Moloch. Much pottery of this period was found very artistically and curiously decorated.

Samaria is most familiar to Bible readers because it was the capital of King Ahab of Israel, who married the wicked Jezebel of Tyre. There he built "a palace of ivory," and also at Jezebel's suggestion a temple for the licentious worship of Baal, a god of Tyre, whence she came. King Ahab coveted the vineyard of the worthy farmer, Naboth, and when Naboth would not sell it, Ahab, again at Jezebel's bidding, trumped up charges against the farmer and had him put to death.

Extensive remains of Ahab's time have been found, including the colonnade of a palace which, perhaps, enjoyed the view of Naboth's vineyard, which King Ahab coveted. But most interesting are the pre-Israelitish remains that lie below this.

Lying nearer the surface are the remains of mighty buildings erected here by Herod the Great, a large quantity of pottery and tablets of ancient Hebrew writing. Many Biblical names appear in these writings, such as Elisha, Asa, Nathan, Uzza, Sheba and Abiezer. Then there is a frequent reference to a vineyard which was probably that belonging to Naboth.

Samaria stands upon a hill that rises to a height of four to five hundred feet above the valleys which surround it. From the summit, some fourteen hundred feet above sea-level, one may, on clear days, see the Mediterranean, some twenty miles to the west. There are also fine views into higher mountains on the north and east, and over the hills and valleys south and west. The natural steep sides of the hill were early rendered impregnable by massive walls. The Herodian city, built here after the days of Jewish decadence on the top of the hill, was about two and a quarter miles in circumference, and the city of Ahab was perhaps not much smaller. The Herodian wall can still be easily traced.

For agricultural purposes the hill has been heavily terraced, a work which has greatly disturbed and confused the ancient debris.

Samaria remained the capital of Israel till taken by the Assyrians in 722 B. C. From the days of Ahab until Herod Samaria passed through many vicissitudes. It was repeatedly destroyed and rebuilt and its citizens carried off into captivity.

But under Herod the Great the city reached its greatest artistic glory. It was his capital from 37 B. C. to A. D. 4. He rebuilt the city with great splendor and named it Sebaste in honor of the Roman Emperor Augustus. He strongly fortified the place and erected a great temple here.

Nothing remains of this once flourishing and mighty city to-day but a mass of ruins. On the eastern side of the hill, just below the summit, there is an insignificant village called Sebustiyeh, of about 500 souls. There is a mosque here, the remains of a church built by the Crusaders, which is said to contain the tombs of John the Baptist, Elisha and Obediah.

As you gaze up at Samaria from this squalid village the eye meets portions of ancient edifices and isolated columns, eloquent reminders of the glories of a departed royal city. You recall that it was to this Samaria that the prophet Elijah came and challenged the court and all the priests to meet him on Mount Carmel in a remarkable fire test to prove which was the true God, Jehovah or Baal. Then Samaria was the home of Elisha who was visited here by that great Syrian soldier, Naaman, who came to be cured of his leprosy. With a great retinue of horses, chariots and servants he went to the royal palace, but later got to the house of the prophet and was sent by him to dip in the Jordan seven times. It was in the palace here that Salome danced before Herod and his friends and so pleased the monarch that he promised to give her whatever she might ask, and on the advice of her mother, Herodias besought the head of John the Baptist.

It was in 1908 that the Turkish Government gave the necessary permission to the American archæologist to excavate in Samaria.

The most extensive and the most interesting work done was that on the summit of the hill. Here sometimes as many as four hundred men, women and boys, including gangs of experienced workers from Egypt, were employed at one time. Here, by long continued and indefatigable toil, the rubbish of successive generations, of civilizations and conquests was removed for a depth of many feet, until the bed rock was reached which disclosed, without a doubt, the extensive palace of Ahab and Omri, his father, covering an area of nearly two acres.

Here it may be noted that this is the first and only palace of a Hebrew king ever found. It covers, approximately, an area of two acres, but its limits have not yet been reached.

③ The Water Tunnel Found by Which Da

EXACTLY how King David wrested the strong citadel of Jerusalem from the Jebusites is the most interesting of the recent discoveries in the Holy Land which throw new light on Biblical accounts. The question is answered by the results of excavations in the Hill of Ophel, upon which the citadel commanding the lower part of the ancient city stood.

The Bible tells us that at the close of David's seven years' reign in Hebron, the King and his men marched upon Jerusalem to take it, and were scoffed at by the inhabitants, who believed their citadel to be impregnable. Bible scholars have reasoned that the lower part of the city was already in David's hands. Until now the Bible account has puzzled the scholars. It is contained in the eighth and ninth verses of the fifth chapter of Second Samuel, as follows:

"And David said on that day, Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, he shall be chief and captain. . . .

"So David dwelt in the fort, and he called it the City of David."

The fact described here put the citadel, as yet unconquered, in David's possession. It was Joab who became "chief and captain," so it must have been Joab and his men who went up to the "gutter." But what was this "gutter?" That is what the excavations referred to determine without any doubt. It was th ground aqueduct which brought wate fortress from the Pool of Siloam.

In later days, when Solomon and h sors ruled in Jerusalem, other canals through the bowels of the hill for irriga poses. But it remained for Hezekiah fame as a builder of waterworks is spo the Scriptures) to connect the Virg with the Pool of Siloam by a tunnel tw dred cubits in length.

This tunnel, the very existence of been forgotten for thousands of year directly through the rocky entrails o It was dug from both ends, the two workmen meeting in the middle. record of this remarkable engineering ment has been fortunately preserved scription found on a stone set into th the passage. It reads:

"Behold the Excavation! While tha were still lifting up the pick, and w cubits still remained to cut through, e the voice of the other, who called to bor, since there was an excess of ro right hand and on the left. And on the excavation the workmen struck meet his neighbor, pick against pick, flowed the waters from the spring to th twelve hundred cubits; and a hundr was the height of the rock over the he workmen."

Now, then, we are able for the fir read with an understanding eye certain of the Bible relating to this subject.

② Great Salt Mines and Rich Mineral Deposits on the Dead Sea's Shores to Be Exploited by American Capital

THE DEAD SEA and the region about it are to be explored by a syndicate of American capitalists. For that purpose valuable concessions have already been obtained from the Turkish Government.

Commercially the enterprise will undoubtedly prove most profitable, for the bed of the sea and its margins are known to be enormously rich in mineral wealth. The finest and purest bitumen, marble, porphyry and many beautiful and precious stones, as well as phosphates, invaluable agriculturally, are to be found in great quantities, while evidence of coal and oil are not lacking in this region.

Rich gold mines, it is believed, will be discovered there, although no effort has been made to prospect the district. In Byzantine times, there is no doubt at all, copper mines were worked near the south end of the Dead Sea, both in horizontal galleries and vertical shafts, but the mineral resources of the ancient age have been entirely ignored in modern times.

In 1848 a half-hearted attempt to make a systematic study of the region was made by Lieutenant Lynch, of the United States Navy, and a few years later another ineffectual expedition was undertaken by the Duc de Luynes. Although both these explorers gave to the world many unknown facts about the region, the American syndicate will conduct its investigation on what is for all practical purposes virgin territory.

From the standpoint of the archeologist, the expedition is even more promising, for it was upon the shore of the Dead Sea that the ancient cities of Sodom and Gomorrah are known to have existed, although their exact location is more or less a matter of doubt.

The shower of brimstone and fire which destroyed the two cities could hardly have destroyed utterly all the treasures which those cities contained, and the excavations to be undertaken by the explorers may therefore result in the recovery of many valuable relics.

The concession under which the American capitalists will operate was originally obtained by Bound Bey, a leading member of the Turkish Parliament, who transferred it to the syndicate for the comparatively small sum of $360,000.

Although thousands of tourists and pilgrims visit the Dead Sea every year, it is to a great extent still unexplored. Except for a little spot at the north end of the lake, the point nearest Jerusalem, its desolate shores, its curious fertile oases, gloomy ravines, picturesque gorges and magnificent mountains have been practically untrod by man.

The Dead Sea is some forty-seven miles long and about ten miles wide at its greatest breadth. Curiously enough, it lies 1,300 feet below the surface of the Mediterranean. There is no other body of water at such a depth below sea level on the face of the globe. Many strange tales are told about the Dead Sea, some true and some not. For instance, people will tell you in Jerusalem that it is impossible to swim in its waters, that no animals or vegetation can exist near its shores, that birds perish when they attempt to fly across it, and that even man cannot remain long upon its waters without catching a fatal fever.

While it is true that fish cannot live in its waters, birds may certainly be seen, though in very small numbers, at the few small fertile valleys that dot its shores, while vegetation can be grown almost anywhere along its shores—provided there is a supply of fresh water. As for swimming, the excessive buoyancy of the water amply renders it difficult to make much headway, but swimming is both feasible and refreshing. It is advisable, however, not to let the water get into the eyes, on account of its excessive saltness. In fact, if Palestine belonged to any Power but Turkey, probably the northern shore of the Dead Sea would be a popular bathing section. No doubt the chloride of magnesia which enters so largely into the composition of the water would be found to have medicinal and curative properties. The density of the water of the Dead Sea may be realized from the following figures. In a ton of water from the Caspian Sea there are eleven pounds of salt; in the Baltic, eighteen pounds; in the Black Sea, twenty-six pounds; in the Atlantic, thirty-one pounds; in the English Channel, seventy-two pounds; in the Mediterranean, eighty-five pounds; in the Red Sea, ninety-three pounds, and in the Dead Sea, one hundred and eighty-seven pounds.

It has always been stated that this famous inland sea is decreasing in size. As a matter of fact, the reverse is the case. All pictures and maps describing the region twenty years ago show the presence of a small island, about half a mile from the shore, at the north end of the lake. This has now entirely disappeared, while on the western, eastern and southern shores evidence of the encroachment of the water upon the land is discernible in the partially submerged forests of large trees still standing in the death-dealing water.

To the popular mind the Dead Sea is always associated with Sodom and Gomorrah, the "cities of the plain," that were destroyed by fire and brimstone on account of the great wickedness of their inhabitants. Biblical scholars and explorers have never yet been able to agree unanimously upon the site of these ancient cities. Tradition has conveniently placed them on the northern shore, the spot visited by tourists and pilgrims. Those who have studied the subject at all closely, however, are inclined to believe that those cities stood on the eastern shore, where there are unmistakable evidences of volcanic upheaval. Sulphur, bitumen and possibly oil would naturally have played a part in the overthrow.

On a recent exploring trip, however, evidences for the first time of volcanic eruption were found on the western side of the sea. Perhaps when the miners get to work more definite evidence may be forthcoming and this vexed and extremely interesting point as to the site of these two Biblical cities definitely settled.

In the journey around this historic sea four or five very fertile little plains, abundantly watered, and capable of great development, were found. They are known as "ghors." They are only a few acres in extent, but simply fertile. Indeed, as soon as one crop is harvested another can be put in. It is not necessary to wait for the seasons. Several crops of delicious fruit may be had in one year, while millet can be harvested at least three times in twelve months. Only American capital is needed to make the country very profitable to work, particularly in supplying vegetables to Jerusalem and other Palestine cities during the Winter months.

"Hezekiah took counsel with his princes and his mighty men to stop the waters of the fountains which were without the city, and they did help him." (Chronicles, xxxii., 3.)

"And the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and how he made a pool and a conduit, and brought water into the city, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the Kings of Judah?" (Kings xx., 20).

Of course, the enterprise in question, involving as it did a vast deal of labor with such crude tools as were then at hand, was undertaken with some very important object in view. As to what this object was there is no doubt whatever, for it is explained in the Bible that King Hezekiah was in constant fear of a long-threatened attack by the Assyrians, and that the boring of the Siloam tunnel was a defensive precaution. Connecting as it did the "Fountain of Gihon" (or Virgin's Well as it was later called) with a reservoir inside the city, it tapped the only available source of a plentiful water supply, and made the latter available in case of siege.

All the evidence plainly shows that the tunnel dug by Hezekiah was this tunnel and no other. The Hebrew lettering on the stone already mentioned is that of Hezekiah's time; and there is an obvious agreement between the Biblical documents and conditions as they are found to-day.

The exploration, made under the auspices of the Biblical and Archaeological School of Jerusalem has thrown much light upon dark places of ancient history.

Evidently it never occurred to the Jebusites that an entrance to their well-fortified city could be effected through this channel. They laughed at King David when he undertook to besiege them. But David was an experienced and resourceful warrior and looked about him for some stratagem by which he might successfully attack the supposedly impregnable fortress.

Quite possibly some traitor gave away the secret of the "minor," for we read that, at all events, David made up his mind to try that means of entrance, and, realizing the difficulty and danger involved in the attempt, offered an unlimited reward.

It was what we should call in these days a forlorn hope, and there was a call for volunteers. Joab, a bold and gallant soldier, offered to make his way through and up the minor and find out whether it was practicable as a mode of entrance to the town. Helped up into it by his companions from the second cavern already mentioned (the connection of which with the Fountain of Gihon was secret), he explored it, and, having found out what he wanted to know, led a small but determined band of armed men into the midst of the town. This attack from a quarter whence it was least expected, caused a panic, advantage of which was taken by David and his troops to force their way into the town—the gates being opened for them, perhaps. In all likelihood the surprise was accomplished in the night.

The conquerors of the Jebusites fully appreciated the value of the water system, and experience had taught them how to guard against the only weakness which its original owners had not taken into account. To the early Israelite inhabitants of Jerusalem the spring was already gifted with the miraculous properties ascribed to it by tradition. And such properties continued to be attributed to it for many centuries until Christ himself healed in its cleansing waters the man born blind. (John ix., 7.)

The work of excavation was begun in August, 1909, the tunnel being attacked by gangs of workmen starting from both ends. It was filled up to a large extent with debris—mostly mud—which had become almost as hard as cement. Behind the diggers were long chains of men who handed baskets and buckets of mud and debris back to the entrances. This went on day and night, by candlelight, squads succeeding each other in the bowels of the mountains.

Not only the Gihon-Siloam tunnel was excavated in this way, but other dark and mysterious conduits which seemed to extend endlessly into the very entrails of the rock. It was a huge job, although the most expensive and up-to-date machinery was used, with trained engineers to direct operations. Incidentally, the Virgin's Well was thoroughly cleaned out and put into working order. Its basin was made waterproof with the best cement, and the narrow and slippery entrance was enlarged in such a way as to provide a small platform for the peasant women of the village of Siloam, who are now drawing a far cleaner and more abundant supply of water than they have known for centuries.

Underground Jerusalem as yet has been but little explored, and archaeologists are looking forward to discoveries still more strange, especially in the subterranean area beneath the place where once upon a time the Temple of King Solomon stood.

Some New Scientific Reasons WHY WOMEN TALK so MUCH

Woman Has a Better Blood Supply in the EMOTIONAL SECTION of Her BRAIN

F[illegible] and even for ages uncounted, [illegible] greater "talker" in the [illegible]

[illegible] Sir Crichton Browne ex[illegible] of [illegible] flow of blood to [illegible] head. The front [illegible] supply of [illegible] arterial blood at [illegible] or back, while the best and biggest supply of blood to man's brain is in the [illegible] or front.

Sir [illegible] explains that the work of the two regions [illegible] different, that the back of the brain is [illegible] and concerned with seeing and hearing. The front of the brain contains the centers of the will, the association centers which include appetites and desires based upon internal sensations.

The brain [illegible] women the [illegible] of [illegible] flows through the [illegible] blood [illegible] dates through the front of the brain; thus the various brain centres are variously stimulated according to the blood supply.

This explains Sir James, is why women see things [illegible] and faster talkers, why [illegible] perception, rapidity of thought and emotional sensibility are increased in comparison to those of man. On the other hand the richer blood [illegible] man gives him [illegible] intellectual [illegible] will and stronger [illegible]

[illegible] explanation of [illegible] and faster [illegible] explains [illegible] "[illegible] in Child Study," in which he [illegible] observations, experiments and [illegible], all of which were related to the brains of male and female children and the quality of blood as it varied [illegible]

"[illegible] speaking," said this great English [illegible] of the significance of differences in the composition of the blood in relation to brain function, but there is another question bearing on blood supply, that is well deserving of consideration in connection with child study and the evolution of sex, and that is its distribution in the brain. Are all parts of the brain equally well supplied with blood, or are certain parts of it better irrigated than others, and is the system of irrigation the same throughout life? Are male and female brains equally well flushed with blood? In order to obtain an answer to the latter questions, Dr. Sydney Martin, F. R. S., some years ago, at my request, made a number of measurements by a new method of the great arteries that carry blood to the brain. These arteries are four in number, two internal carotids in front and two vertebrals behind, and these were measured at the point where they enter the cranial cavity immediately after passing through the skull and its outer membrane. Dr. Martin found that the diameters of these four vessels taken together are slightly greater in the male than in the female, but when the difference in size of the male and female brain is taken into account it was found that in proportion to brain weight their conjoint diameter is greater in the female than in the male, and so it appears that upon the whole the female brain receives as large, perhaps a slightly larger, supply of blood in proportion to its mass than does the male brain.

To catalogue in the briefest way the bodily differences between the male and the female which underlie the intellectual disparities would be to exhaust the time at my disposal. They are universal and intimate, and involve every organ and tissue. They extend from cuticular appendages to the marrow of the bones, from the crown of the head—for, according to Broca, the female cranium is less elevated than that of the male—to the sole of the foot—for, according to Delauncey, woman has a plantar arch flatter than that of man,—which perhaps accounts for her partiality for high-heeled boots. It is, of course, in the brain that the immediate substratum of mental sex differences must be sought, and although prolonged exploration is still necessary to explicate the stratification and cleavage of that substratum, indications are not now wanting that it is differently organized in the two sexes; and hopes may be entertained that we shall yet be able to recognize in it histological differences in structure corresponding with the markedly different epochs of mental evolution in boys and girls.

"There is one well-established physiological difference between men and women that must not be lost sight of in connection with cerebral activity, and that is the composition of the blood. The fact may not, perhaps, be palatable to some uncompromising advocates of women's rights, but it is a fact that there is a marked difference in the blood of the two sexes. The red corpuscles of the blood whose function, speaking generally, is to carry oxygen from the lungs to the tissues, average in number 5,000,000 per cubic [illegible] hundredths of an inch of blood in the adult male, and 4,500,000 per cubic thirty-nine hundredths of an inch in the adult female. The blood of the adult male is, therefore, ten per cent richer in red blood corpuscles than the blood of the adult female. The number of these red corpuscles of the blood no doubt varies greatly under different conditions. It varies in individuals with states of nutrition and modes of life, and even with the time of day, showing a distinct diminution after meals; it varies in pathological states, being reduced to an extreme degree in anaemia; and it varies in accordance with geographical position, being sometimes increased in those who live at very high altitudes (10,000 feet) from 5 up to 7 or even 8 million per cubic thirty-nine hundredths of an inch. The reaction under these circumstances begins very quickly, within twenty-four hours according to some observers, and even in less time according to others who have experimented in balloon ascents, but in whatever time established, it is clearly an adaptation by which by means of an increased number of corpuscles, the oxygen carrying capacity of the blood is raised to compensate for the diminished amount of oxygen in the air. We shall await with curiosity blood counts in the case of our adventurous aviators."

Preserving the HEALTH With the Aid of LEMONS

NO OTHER fruit can ap[illegible] utility [illegible] of its [illegible] where a [illegible]

As the most [illegible] of our fruits [illegible] a valuable tonic and [illegible] valued [illegible] blood, [illegible] in disorders [illegible] of the ancient Romans [illegible] used [illegible] believe that typhoid can be prevented or driven out by [illegible] both the rind and the juice of this useful fruit.

So valuable is the lemon in the prevention of scurvy that the English shipping laws require every ship in the foreign trade to [illegible] so that every sailor may have a daily allowance of one ounce of lemon juice after being ten days at sea. The lemon cure is a favorite with women who wish to cultivate slender figures. Copious draughts of hot lemonade, without sugar or sweetened with a little saccharine, taken in the early morning, in place of afternoon tea and just before going to bed, serve not only as a splendid tonic, but also help materially in reducing one's weight.

One of the best ways of preparing lemons [illegible] is that in use in the malarial districts of Italy. One lemon, rind and all is sliced thin and boiled with one and one-half pints of water until reduced to one-half pint. The [illegible] strained through coarse muslin so that part of the tender pulp and rind are excluded. After being cooled it is [illegible] taking regularly for several days as a cure or prevention for malaria.

Baked lemons and flaxseed lemonade are old reliable remedies for colds. The juice of a lemon beaten together with the white of an egg and a little sugar or honey is a favorite remedy for singers and public speakers when threatened with hoarseness. And [illegible] often recommend the juice of a whole lemon squeezed into a cup of strong, black coffee, while every one knows, or should know, that for the "bad taste" in the mouth in the morning nothing is so satisfactory as a lemon, cut in half and sucked as one would suck an orange.

YOU MIGHT TRY—

For Autoists.

WHEN motoring always have within reach one of those small toy megaphones that can be bought for a dime or a quarter. It is handy for asking directions of people sitting on verandas some distance away, and they can generally reply by pointing in the right direction.

A Novel Hitching Post.

YOU can make a substantial and good looking hitching post by filling a nail keg with soft cement, inserting an iron ring in it, and when thoroughly hard, knock the keg apart. It can be moved about, but no horse can get away from it.

Cleaning Steel.

BUCKLES, buttons, beads and other articles of polished steel may be beautifully cleaned by covering with unslaked lime and leaving for a short time.

To Get All the Juice.

IN extracting the juice of lemon or orange, much more juice will be obtained if the fruit is first covered with cold water and allowed to come to a boil before the fruit is cut.

Mending Light Bulbs.

ELECTRIC bulbs can be easily mended if only one and sometimes two wires are broken. Attach the bulb to a drop light, turn on the electricity and place the bulb between you and the light. Then gently shake back and forth; the motion will cause the wires to meet and the current will weld the wires together. You will then have a light as good as new.

For the Ice Chest.

TO prevent a dish from slipping when placed on the ice, put a rubber ring (such as comes on all ordinary fruit jars) underneath it.

Why OLD PEOPLE Should NOT EAT Very MUCH

BY the time the average person has reached middle life he is supposed to have stored up sufficient energy to carry him through the remainder of his life in good health. But this is rarely ever true to-day.

The reason for this is that the average person overstrains his system, by too hearty indulgence in both foods and alcoholic drinks. During the younger years the system is strong enough to counteract ordinary intemperance in eating and drinking, but by doing this the body is not storing up the energy it should, and so when middle life comes health is not all it should be.

For these reasons a man of forty-five or fifty, or a woman, for that matter, should not eat and drink as heartily as during the younger years. The less a man eats when he gets to be fifty years old the healthier he will be.

Having a splendid appetite in youth and early maturity, we indulge it, thoughtless of the fact that we need only a certain amount of nourishment and that whatever we eat over that adds to the bulk that must be got rid of, and this means extra and unnecessary work for the organs.

Again, in middle life we are too ready to ride instead of walk and generally to take less exercise; and worst of all, we come to find our greatest pleasure in eating and drinking. Then, as we grow more and more self-indulgent, we get stouter and stouter.

This is so common that people think it quite "natural" to get fat in middle life. But the getting fat is not the worst that may happen; the surplus of waste matter (due to eating too much, especially of animal food and to drinking sweet alcoholics) leads to about half the headaches, backaches, rheumatism and gout of the middle-aged.

By middle age we ought to have stored up enough energy to carry us through the [illegible] of life. After fifty the food taken [illegible] be just enough to keep one going; and not so much as will leave waste matter in the system to produce headaches and other distressing ailments.

Overmuch meat and alcohol are the chief offenders against the laws of [illegible] The middle-aged can do very well with little of them and will actually enjoy life better in every way for abstinence [illegible] ing them. One will have a [illegible] and a more active body if he takes only [illegible] is required to keep up a fair weight; and this should be the test.

What JESUS Said About MONEY

WHEN Jesus cast out the [illegible] from [illegible] Matthew [illegible] "Make [illegible] Father's house a house of merchandise." (John, [illegible])

That other scene, in which the wealthy appear in the temple tossing in their great contributions while a widow comes and gives two mites, may well serve as the contrast for the other picture. Of this widow Jesus says: "This poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury." (Mark, [illegible]) Here [illegible] indicates very plainly that it is not the [illegible] of one's contribution to religious purposes which counts, but the spirit in which it is given, and [illegible] to some churches that true [illegible] Jesus stood, that ignores the [illegible] given, and looks only to the will of [illegible]

The [illegible] of money, according to the view [illegible] presented in that interview with the [illegible] when they ask Him whether it is lawful [illegible] to the Romans. He tells them: "Bring [illegible] that I may see it." (Mark, xii., 15.) And [illegible] brought it." And He saith unto them: "Whose is this image and superscription?" And they said unto Him, 'Caesar's.' And Jesus answering said unto them: 'Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God, the things that are God's.'"

From this it is plain that Jesus was not blind to the need of money for the transaction of business and the paying of taxes, but that He held it as of little account in matters divine. In His indignation against the purse-proud, Jesus cried out: "Woe unto ye that are rich, for ye have received your consolation." (Luke, vi., 24.) When He was advising the rich young ruler what to do He said: "Sell all thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." (Luke, xviii, 22.) Here He laid down clearly the duty of the rich, and emphasized His view of the right use of money. It was to be distributed to the poor—that was its highest use.

In that famous parable of the sower Jesus says plainly: "The care of this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful." (Matthew, xiii, 22.) Jesus saw this world merely as a preparation for the next, and riches, as such, had no value whatever, but obscured the right view of moral duty, making the wealthy unfruitful spiritually.

How to Grow Your Own ORCHIDS

ORCHIDS at from $1 to $3 each are a little too expensive for the average person, but this should not prevent the lovers of these exquisite flowers from growing their own. A few well-selected small plants may be secured at a small expense and with care they can be made to bloom in a manner that will enable you to wear one of the rare blossoms on various occasions when you otherwise could not afford them. A good-sized soap box, painted some unobtrusive shade to harmonize with your room, with a roof of glass, its edges enclosed between slats which are puttied to the glass, can be converted into a suitable hot house for the orchids. The box should be placed, if possible, in a bay window or in a window generously supplied with sunlight. Once the orchids are planted and have begun growing they require very little attention and watering, for the shut-in air of the little hot house has small chance to evaporate its moisture. In Winter it is, of course, necessary to supply heat to this hot house in some way. If the house has electric light equipment the simplest way of heating the box is by passing the wiring for an electric bulb through a hole bored through the side of the box into the box itself. Two 8 candle-power lamps or one 16 candle-power lamp gives sufficient heat to a box of ordinary size.

How to WASH Fine LACE

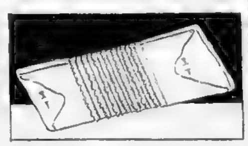
OF all [illegible] woman [illegible] difficult [illegible] particularly when it is being washed or renovated.

Valuable lace is often ruined by being wrapped in white paper. The chloride of lime which is used to bleach paper will injure any delicate fabric that lies against it for any length of time. Blue paper, or any color but white, should be used to wrap lace in.

To wash the most fragile and delicate lace so that it will look like new wind it firmly and evenly around a small white board, over which a piece of soft, clean, white calico has been tightly stitched. The lace should be wound round and round so that each layer will overlap the previous one. When three or four layers have been put on secure the ends by stitching and stitch over all a clean, white wrapping not too thick.

Then hold the board upright in a basin of hot suds and scour vigorously with a brush.



"To wash lace, wind it about a board as in illustration."

After letting it simmer in a kettle of suds on the fire for a little while take the board out, wrap in thick white towels and set aside to dry for several days.

Black lace should never be rubbed. When it becomes rusty it may be restored by soaking in ammonia and water or by washing in milk and water.

SECRETS OF SUCCESS---No. 12---THE CASHIER

By THOMAS W. HOTCHKISS, Vocational Counsellor.

IT is said that women, as a rule, are better than men as cashiers in mercantile establishments. One employer states, in explanation, that women are quicker than men at making change and detecting counterfeit money: they keep their cash accounts clearer, and "don't want to run the whole store as men do." Women, he says, do not embezzle; whereas men (but, thank Fortune, not many of them!) gamble, speculate and abscond.

However true this invidious comparison may be, it reveals the responsible and exacting requirements of the position. Whether the young woman sits in her "cage" in a drug-store, candy-store, or restaurant, or sits where the compressed air tubes converge at the cashier's counter of a department store, the duties are practically the same. She receives cash in payment for goods sold, as indicated on the sales-slip, and makes change. She must above all be quick and accurate. She may be working under a regulation that every cent lost will come out of her $8 or $10 a week salary, but this must not make her nervous. Although hurried, she must read the sales-slips correctly; these may be illegibly written, and if not carefully read she may send back too much change. She must also watch for mutilated, punched and plugged coins, for counterfeit pieces and bad bills. She must know who any of the customers are who offer checks in payment; yet she must not unnecessarily call into question the customer's endorsement. She may be told by the customer who has just bought a 10-cent soda check: "I gave you a dollar bill and you gave men only 80 cents change." She must be able to reply out of a clear memory, calmly and firmly: "I gave you a 50-cent piece, a quarter, a dime and a nickel in change."

This kind of work admits of no day-dreaming, and if the cashier, man or woman, is ill or suffering from domestic grief or worry in an extreme degree, it is better to report the fact to the employer at once. Together the two may arrange to remove the cause, if possible, or arrange to secure a vacation for the cashier until the trouble is over.

The duties of a cashier in a bank are different from those in a mercantile house. The bank cashier seldom, if ever, handles money. He is usually an executive officer, who superintends the disposition of the cash, or he is the bank's manager. Where there is an active president or vice-president, the cashier's duties are practically those of head clerk. In savings banks and in many trust companies, the cashier's position is held by the treasurer, there being no distinct office of cashier. Cashiers of country banks are more likely to be the working heads of the banks than are the city cashiers. Thus, in this business, the cashier may or may not hold a place of great responsibility. The steps of promotion to the position of bank cashier or cashier in a large mercantile house, which is likely to be a position of great importance, are through the preliminary business college course of study and through the minor positions in the bank or office.

The position is often combined with that of bookkeeper, but when this is the case the duties of bookkeeper are secondary and usually of the simpler kind.

Buried in His Brain Was His Old Forgotten Sweetheart

And When the Surgeon's Knife Relieved the Compressed Cells, Out She Popped in All Her Youthful Charm... to Add the Most Tragically Romantic Chapter in the Mystery of George Kimmel's Double Personality.

Miss Mabel Finley, as She Appeared Fourteen Years Ago, When the Man of Mystery Courted Her.

Photograph of George Kimmel, Taken After the Operation to Restore His Memory.

"She was all youth and charm—untouched by the years while his memory slumbered."

Of all the published cases of "submerged personality," resulting from injury to the brain which blotted out memory and left the victim ignorant of all his preceeding life, even of his own identity, and which a surgical operation has restored, bringing back the distant past but obscuring events during the period of "submergence," that of George Kimmel, the "man of mystery," is strangest.

Kimmel's submergence during the fourteen years of his wanderings was not constant and absolute, except in one odd particular; though, at intervals, for days at a time, he realized who and what he had been, the romance of his young manhood remained a complete void. The name, the face, the very existence of his old sweetheart had been utterly swept away.

When, at length, he returned to his old home during an interval of fairly complete lucidity, to recognize old friends and be recognized by them, and to talk over details of his former life, there was no evidence of his slightest recollection of any love affair. The name of his old sweetheart was almost the only name familiar in the old days that never fell from his lips.

Yet it was mainly due to the efforts of that same old sweetheart—for many years since the wife of one of his old chums—that a celebrated surgeon was induced to perform the dangerous operation which alone could be hoped to permanently and completely restore his memory. But no sooner was the bit of depressed skull lifted, and the moribund brain cells come fully to life, than Kimmel opened his eyes and whispered eagerly:

"Where's Mabel."

The lost link—the only complete lost link—was restored. Safely out from under the surgeon's knife, Kimmel was on firm ground, with his courtship of pretty Mabel Finley the sure and sound landmark from which to accurately view his whole past so long obscured.

CHAPTER I.

Romance.

THE birthplace and scene of the one love romance in the life of George Kimmel is the pretty little city of Niles, Mich.—just around the south end of Lake Michigan from Chicago. Here the placid St. Joseph River winds its way among the small-fruit farms that supply Chicago with berries from June till late in August, and is the objective of many Summer pleasure parties from the metropolis across the lake.

George—born in 1867—and his sister, Edna, three years younger, enjoyed a fairly happy childhood up to the time of their parents' separation while he was in high school. A little prior to that event a smoldering feud between the prosperous Kimmels and the struggling Johnsons—Mrs. Kimmel's people—blazed forth unreasonably. The separation left Mrs. Kimmel with two children on her hands, and only a small income.

So George, a bright and attractive youth, left high school and went to work in the paper pulp mills at Niles. He kept up his acquaintance with his school chums—the Plant boys, Sam Quimby, Harry Burt and Will Lardner. The girls in their "crowd" were especially Celia Dean and Belle and Mabel Finley. As children, George and Mabel had been "sweethearts." She grew prettier and prettier, and now, with George in the way of making his own fortune, their love romance began in real earnest.

There was no question that George was desperately in love. Mabel's preference for him was plain. It was an ardent and pretty courtship, and before George was twenty their marriage, as soon as George was able to support a wife, was accepted as a foregone conclusion. To hasten this delectable consummation, George secured a position in the First National Bank at Niles, of which an uncle—William Stevens—was president, and his mother's brother, Charles A. Johnson, cashier.

In this position George's prospects were glistened but there developed and widened a rift between him and his love affair with pretty Mabel Finley. Afterwards George was certain his uncle, the cashier, selfishly engineered a breach between them.

A sort of rec ndescence of the old Kimmel-Johnson feud that had separated his mother and father.

"In public my uncle could not be too good to me," George has said; "but in private he brutally mistreated me. He has been the underlying cause of all my misfortunes."

In a fit of pique—though loving Mabel Finley as deeply as ever—he threw up his position and left Niles. He went to New Orleans, then out to Dakota, where he worked in an insurance office. His sister, Edna, joined him and became a district school teacher. In 1890 they moved to Omaha, where they lived for six years. His love romance was over—Mabel Finley had married William Lardner, who was to become a rich mine operator in Duluth, Minn.

CHAPTER II

Finance.

DURING those years George Kimmel had prospered. From Omaha he went to Arkansas City and took charge of the affairs of the Farmers' State Bank there, which were in a bad way. It was a bank in which Uncle Clarence William Stevens, of Niles, was interested. As its president, he restored the concern to a solid basis and acquired personal property valued at more than $75,000. Later his uncle became the nominal president, with George acting also as cashier. His prosperity was sufficient to warrant his taking out life insurance, first of $5,000 and later of $20,000 more.

Here enters vague accounts of his other uncle's, George A. Johnson's, efforts to make him selling agent of lands representing more than $200,000, which he, on published information that they had been stolen, forwarded to the concern which had issued them. And now George Kimmel's misfortunes began in dead earnest.

As cashier of his Arkansas City bank he carried, in July, 1893, $15,000 worth of township bonds to the State Treasurer for redemption. He did not accept the cash, but the promise of the official to mail a draft for the amount to his bank. But on his arrival in Arkansas City, much to his surprise, the hotel clerk delivered to him $520, sent from his bank to the hotel on his telegraphic order. Kimmel had sent no such order, but put the money in his pocket.

Here enters more vague references to his "wicked" uncle's appearance on the scene, a drugged drink or cigar, a period of unconsciousness, an awakening in St. Louis, a walk out in the dark, an assault by three men not yet named—a blow on the back of the head with some heavy weapon, then—oblivion.

CHAPTER III.

Wanderings, Asylum, Prison.

IN 1904 a haggard, ill-dressed man, apparently middle-aged, wandered from one town to another in the northern part of New York State. He called himself Andrew J. White. His mind seemed confused. He lived precariously, from hand to mouth and seemed unable to give any account of himself. In 1906 he was sent to the Marcy Asylum for the Criminal Insane, convicted of "beating a board bill in Buffalo. The regimen seemed to agree with him. He improved much in health. Suddenly his mind cleared, and he announced himself to be George Kimmel, the George Kimmel, of Niles, Omaha and Arkansas City, whose mother had collected $5,000 of his insurance money and then was suing for $20,000 more in the St. Louis courts, declaring her son was long since dead.

The case had received so much publicity that "Andrew's" announcement of his identity attracted wide attention. His description of events in George Kimmel's life were so accurate that he was declared sane and discharged. On a return to his wandering life darkness fell about him again. He was presently arrested on a charge of forgery, convicted and sent to Auburn Prison on a five years' sentence as "Andrew J. White." Out in Auburn his mind again cleared. Again his statement that he was George Kimmel interfered with the efforts of his relatives to collect his life insurance. When the St. Louis court decided that Kimmel was still alive, his mother and sister—the latter now Mrs. Edna Bennett of Chicago—visited Auburn to determine whether he was George Kimmel or an impostor.

They would not recognize him; but Kimmel, during a lucid interval of lucidity, remembered whispering in his mother's ear:

"What am I to call you, if not 'mother?'"

She looked at him in silence, and then whispered: "When we are alone, call me 'mother.'"

CHAPTER IV

Fighting for Recognition.

GEORGE KIMMEL'S release from Auburn occurred on September 17, 1911. His mother, who had died during his imprisonment, gave him $1,000 of his insurance money, which he remembered [illegible] to have left for Mabel [illegible]. Mrs. William Lardner—Mabel—of Duluth—had joined [illegible] Foxes enthusiastic [illegible] their efforts to rehabilitate him. It was she, in fact—through a friend—who had induced Kimmel to "take one chance in a thousand" by submitting himself for an operation on his injured head by the celebrated surgeon, Dr. Loren Wilder, of the Robert Burns Hospital in Chicago.

He knew as he sniffed the ether that the chances were very much against his ever regaining consciousness in this world.

CHAPTER V.

What the Surgeon's Knife Revealed.

KIMMEL'S unconsciousness lapsed into a healthful sleep lasting several hours. When he awoke a nurse was leaning over his hospital cot. Kimmel looked into her inquiring eyes and spoke for the first time since the operation.

"Where's Mabel?" he asked.

The nurse called the surgeon. Kimmel could turn his head unaided. He was looking anxiously about the room. "Where's Mabel?" he asked again.

Dr. Wilder, at [illegible] was astonishingly lucid in describing old-time happenings in Niles, he gave no sign that he remembered [illegible] love for Mabel [illegible]. Mrs. William Lardner—Mabel—of Duluth—had joined [illegible] Foxes enthusiastic [illegible] their efforts to rehabilitate him. It was she, in fact—through a friend—who had induced Kimmel to "take one chance in a thousand" by submitting himself for an operation on his injured head by the celebrated surgeon, Dr. Loren Wilder, of the Robert Burns Hospital in Chicago.

He knew as he sniffed the ether that the chances were very much against his ever regaining consciousness in this world.

With his instruments Dr. Wilder trephined the sunken bit of Kimmel's skull, relieving the pressure on the long benumbed brain cells, and put the patient to bed unconscious, but physically safe, perhaps to awaken mentally sound.

KIMMEL'S unconsciousness lapsed into a healthful sleep lasting several hours. When he awoke a nurse was leaning over his hospital cot. Kimmel looked into her inquiring eyes and spoke for the first time since the operation.

"Where's Mabel?" he asked.

The nurse called the surgeon. Kimmel could turn his head unaided. He was looking anxiously about the room. "Where's Mabel?" he asked again.

They quieted him and he slept again. Mrs. Fox and her friend, Mrs. Maude Quigley, also of Niles, were summoned. They solved the "Mabel" mystery for nurse and surgeon. The operation was a grand success! For the first time Kimmel had recalled his one love romance, pronounced the name of the old sweetheart—all the rest must follow!

And, apparently, so it has. While Kimmel regains his strength in the hospital, reading an occasional cheerful letter from Mrs. Lardner, his old sweetheart, whose husband, his old chum, heartily indorses all her merciful attentions, the old George Kimmel back again knits together the ravelled ends of his memories and plans a future in which no one will deny him either his identity or his material rights.

One detail of his convalescence is a bit hard to bear—the feeling that the surgeon's knife, in releasing those compressed brain cells, sent him back, presto! to the happy days of his love romance. She was all youth and charm, untouched by the years while his memory slumbered.

It is a bit hard to live through again the incidents of his estrangement from Mabel Finley, the sweetheart of his schooldays and his early manhood.

Gaby's New Clothes.

Captivating Gowns and Hats with Which the Beautiful Prima Donna Is Holding Paris

Gaby's New Chic Black Tulle Hat.

Her New Evening Hat of Black Straw.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City.

By LADY DUFF-GORDON ("Lucile")

I KNOW that you are more or less interested in little Gaby Deslys and so, perhaps, a description of her new Summer clothes may be rather interesting.

Here is a picture of her [illegible] walking costume. [illegible] relieved with touches of [illegible]. The coat [illegible] a pet [illegible] of [illegible], Gaby's costume [illegible].

The [illegible] walking habit is quite distinctive. It is of white broadcloth, and Gaby calls the coat her Napoleon coat. The collar and cuffs are of [illegible] to match [illegible] green kid. The coat is cut [illegible] show the waistcoat. The buttons are of silver, and the [illegible] coat extend far down the back [illegible] are cut Napoleon. The riding hat is a fine white straw.

Gaby is very fond of [illegible] millinery. One of the pictures shows her [illegible] black tulle hat with folds of [illegible] tulle underneath, surrounded by two [illegible] black aigrettes [illegible] back. [illegible] other shows a black afternoon hat of straw, with aigrettes [illegible] with long ostrich aigrettes down the back nearly touching the shoulders.

Next I have two phases of [illegible] trade fashion to introduce to you and to prove to you that really this season you can be fashionable and consequently happy in any style that happens to suit you best. A dark blue serge of the fine coating order, which wears as well as it looks, first displays on its trim coat a deeply down-turned collar of [illegible] emblem-dotted lawn and then a centre fastening of buttons centred with blue serge and braid-[illegible] [illegible] silk—blue [illegible] [illegible] a little prettily [illegible] [illegible] long chat used to [illegible] the buttonholes and follow [illegible] curve of the coat down the [illegible].

There is a broad silken sash folded about the waist, but [illegible] thus accentuating its line [illegible] suggesting the least inward [illegible] and being just finished off at [illegible] left side with short sash ends, [illegible] with a silken fringe, which [illegible] two [illegible] dominant colors of blue and green. On the short and [illegible] skirt the central [illegible] and buttons are combined in an [illegible] broken line, but its scantiness is so marked that one wonders where are those wider garments which were promised! They are possibly available in some cases and costumes, it is true, but apparently no one seems to want to wear them! Nor must we by any means omit from my chronicling or your copying of this costume a companion hat of dark blue Tegal straw, whose tricorne shape is absolutely untrimmed save for a central and upstanding ornament of brilliant red coloring which is of such novel aspect and effect that you do not at first realize that it is merely an ordinary silk cord tassel, treated in an extraordinary way — that is, turned upward instead of hanging downward, and after being provided with a central stiffening to keep it in this position permanently, being tied round in the centre with a twist of silk.

Now the [illegible] sacques of this costume reach well below the hips, but another new model is made distinctive by a little Empire bolero of black cloth, which ends its brief but beautiful career just beneath the bust and is fastened across the front with several horizontal strappings of royal blue cloth and groups of bright black shoe buttons. Yes, nothing more nor less than shoe buttons. These same ordinarily prosaic but now glorified things are clustered still more closely all down the front of the corseted skirt of bright blue cloth, or where the blue strappings, too, are continued, though having there a background of the same color. They are rather less noticeable, while the finishing touches of the costume in this, its first, aspect are provided by a softly frilled collar and jabot of ivory lawn, edged with blue (other and narrower frills fall far over the hands, by the way), and a belt of black patent leather, which marks and accentuates the high waist-line. And then belt and coat removed there is revealed (for indoor or luncheon wear) the whole beautiful color of the high corseted skirt of royal blue cloth and the mellowtoned softness of a complete and [illegible] blouse of the same.

And now, how do you like these lines and some of the salient aspects of the coat and skirt costume, and which will you decide to wear, I wonder! There is at any rate sufficient variety for every one of you to be well suited, and not one in which you cannot look specially and satisfyingly smart.

In the matter of millinery, "beanstalk" trimmings are in great vogue, but you must see—and wear if you will—other hats, whose adornments are absolutely flat instead of upstanding, one quaint model of which I have in mind being made of the black pelaid straw, which is as durable as it is fashionable, and having a wide brim of somewhat "mushroom" tendencies, allied to a rather low-down crown. And round this are set a number of little tangerines, most realistically copied in orange-hued and closely clipped wool, while set in the front is a big ornament formed of a centre of pale-hued lemon, encircled with the little, brightly hued tangerines.

It is amusing to note, too, that this same passion for extremes is [illegible] affecting the little bouquets [illegible] are the fashionable and fascinating wear with all kinds of costume [illegible] and dresses just now. For while there are many of flat cabochon formation, with, perhaps, a centre of pink moss-rose buds set round with a broad band of forget-me-nots, and then again with closely clustered "cherry pie" and a star-shaped edging of green leaves—there are also being shown now some tall bouquets of flowers, which are miniature reproductions of the "beanstalk" hat trimmings, and which are intended to be fastened at the waistband, instead of higher up on the corsage, as are those flat cabochons. There will be some fresh green leaves to form a base—the stalks are not shown at all, you must know—and then half a dozen pink roses will be massed together beneath a tapering cluster of forget-me-nots, in the very centre of which will be set one half-opened pink rose. The whole thing is both quaint and pretty, and though only just introduced is in great demand.

My Secrets of Beauty.

By Mme. LINA CAVALIERI, the Greatest Living Beauty

THERE is an appalling ignorance of, coupled with an equal indifference to food values. Most persons eat whatever they want, and as much as they want, without the slightest thought of whether they are putting into the body that which will nourish and rebuild, instead of clog and destroy it.

Mme. Cavalieri's article gives valuable advice as to how to check overeating and gives valuable recipes for semi-fluid or fluid foods at a time when the stomach is resting from too heavy feeding. The article may be read with profit.

By Mme. LINA CAVALIERI.

I AM glad to note that women are making diet a matter of [illegible] study, for the relation of food to health and beauty cannot [illegible] to be measured.

Train yourself to note your symptoms and treat them by diet. When your face has a mottled appearance you may be sure that you are eating too much food of all sorts or that you are eating too much that is greasy or rich or sweet. A [illegible] Parisienne when she notices such symptoms limits herself to one moderate meal a day—her dinner—and the earlier part of the day contents herself with fruits and salads, drinking water moderately at these meals and copiously between them.

She lunched with me one day at a fashionable hotel on the Place Vendome and I began my study of the menu by asking her if she would have some of her favorite chocolate. She shrugged her shoulders and answered bravely: "Not for a long [illegible]. I enjoy another cup of my [illegible] chocolate. To-day I shall [illegible] rolls, Romaine salad and [illegible]."

[illegible] digested upon this ascetic [illegible] dressing while she slowly [illegible] that her breakfast had been of [illegible] and apples chopped very fine and covered with their own juice. Thus with one dinner daily—more than usually well masticated—I cleared her complexion in ten days.

There are many times when we "feel our bodies" and are growing too heavy or too lazy that it is well to subsist for a few days on a liquid diet. These nourishing drinks strengthen the body even while the work of removing the remaining ashes from the body goes on.

Whole Barley.....Tablespoonful
A Slice of Lemon
Boiling Water.....2 Cupfuls

Place the barley and slice of lemon in an earthen dish. Over them pour the boiling water. Cover the dish and let the mixture stand for ten minutes. Then strain into another earthen dish. The drink may be flavored with a small quantity of sugar if preferred. The quantity given is for one meal for one person.

This is a drink often taken by athletes to refresh them during their training period in England, but is useful to women taking a semi fast for beauty's sake.

Bran.....2 Tablespoonfuls
Seeded Raisins..1 Tablespoonful
Lemon.....1 Thick Slice

Chop the raisins fine and place them with the bran and lemon in an earthen bowl. Over these pour a half pint of boiling water. Let stand to cool and blend for ten minutes. Strain and drink while warm. Raisins are of special value in cleansing and toning the kidneys.

Mme. LINA CAVALIERI.

The water in which peeled apples have been stewed and to which a few currants have been added is a strengthening, cooling and cleansing drink. It is made more appetizing by the addition of a few cloves or a broken stick of cinnamon.

This is another tonic and refreshing drink during the time when you are eating little, or nothing:

Squeeze into a large coffee cup the juice of one orange. Fill the space remaining in the cup with boiling water. Add a teaspoonful of liquid honey and the same amount of lemon juice.

Milk .....1 Pint
Hot Water...1 Pint

Slowly sip in lieu of a meal. The use of water in a way prevents the clogging of the system that sometimes follows an exclusively milk diet.

A drink much in use in England, that is half food half medicinal, is this:

2 Tablespoonfuls of Whole Wheat.
A Little Caraway or Celery Seed to Flavor.

Into a pint bowl of boiling water stir the whole wheat that has been ground. Add the caraway or celery seed. Sweeten, if you wish, with a half teaspoonful of powdered licorice.

Ground Peanuts.1 Tablespoonful
Boiling Water.....1 Cupful
Flavor with equal quantities of honey or lemon juice as desired.

Perhaps you prefer meat juices fu[illegible]

Beauty Questions Answered

M. S. complains of a red nose, scant hair, rough red hands, and thin yellow face. M. S. was certainly not looking her best when she wrote that letter. If your nose is red, your hands gritto and your face yellow, your circulation must be poor and you would do well to visit a physician and let him prescribe a different manner of living. Your scant hair leads me to think, too, that you are anaemic and your body needs rebuilding. The physician can help you to this. But help him by giving more intelligent care to yourself. Contrive to get all the sunlight you can, all the fresh air possible, to eat your food slowly and let it be the most nourishing you can get. Bathe every day in cool water, rubbing the skin well with the palms or a brush or rough washcloth. My advice can be summed up in three words: "Live more hygienically."

L. W. L. asks whether there is any remedy guaranteed to remove superfluous hairs from the face and keep them off.

No, I have repeatedly said that there is no certainty that the hair will not grow again, for even electrolysis has failed in some cases. But it is successful in more cases than any other treatment has been. As you say, there is danger in inexperienced or unreliable persons attempt it. Be sure that the operator is experienced and responsible and of good standing in the community. She asks also whether I would advise taking medicine internally to reduce the weight? Never.

"I am a boy of fourteen," writes "Unfortunate," "and am forced to shave on account of a large growth of hair on my face. Will you please let me know how I can prevent this growth of hair?"

Peroxide of hydrogen will bleach the hair so that it will be less conspicuous in color. But there is no remedy in your case for the growth of hair.

Make the best of it. In a few short years you will not regard it as an affliction. It is not very uncommon even at your age.

Try simple remedies first. Bathe your face in buttermilk every night before retiring. Lemon juice mixed with an equal part of glycerine is often efficacious. If these fail, paint the freckles at night with glycerine, 1½ ozs.; tincture of iodine, ½ oz.

A. R. requests: "Will you kindly give me a bleach for the face, neck and arms, one that will not grow hairs?"

AN ANT THAT REALLY THINKS!

An African Species to Which Even Elephants Give the Right of Way, Which Tunnels Under Rivers, Has Officers for Its Army and Holds Conventions to Elect Successive Rulers.

Driver Ants Holding a Convention at Which a New Ruler Is to Be Elected.

By LOUIS P. BOWLER, F. C. I.

EVERY one is familiar with the remarkable intelligence, strength and industry of the ant. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard," says the Bible, in appreciation of the last named quality. The ordinary ant of the North Temperate zone exhibits all these qualities, carrying burdens many times his own size and exhibiting trained intelligence in his acts—which are all for the whole community, even at the sacrifice of his own life.

Probably most of the actions of our ants, at which we are inclined to marvel, are instinctive. The following, however, from an article by a distinguished naturalist respecting the Driver Ant, of Africa, carries the conviction that this species of ant really thinks.

THE large black species of ant common to the African jungle is generally known as the Driver Ant, for the reason that every living thing makes room for these ants to pass; for if by any chance a mouse or an elephant stands in their road, it is forced to speedily move on, or remain and be eaten up.

The Driver Ants will not budge an inch from the direction they are bent on travelling; no obstacle will prevent their advance but fire or water. They reign supreme as conquerors amidst the inhabitants of the jungle and are universally respected in the insect and animal world.

In Africa, just before the rainy season sets in, it is a common occurrence to see long lines of Driver Ants on the march. They rapidly advance in perfect formation, in lines two or three inches wide, and often extending for nearly a mile, with an organization and military precision that is truly marvellous, as shown by their well-drilled battalions, led by their officers.

It is interesting to watch the various sections pass at the double, first a column in close formation, consisting of warrior ants possessing formidable nippers, led by one or more very large ants, twice the size of the drivers; then a medium ant follows a mixed mass of smaller ants. These are the carriers. Some bring eggs, others their young, bits of leaves and sticks, grass, berries, dead bodies of insects and general goods and coatels from their storehouses and towns.

All trot along with a determined, swaggering air, as if conscious of their irresistible strength by sheer force of numbers. They tear along, tumbling like a cataract over obstacles, and run over one another or not, as the procession winds in and out of the paths in the forest, looking, especially in the moonlight, like a long, black snake, unfolding itself from the jungle growth.

Their sagacity and engineering aptitude are truly remarkable, as seen by the wonderful tunnels they construct, generally under the exposed portion of the road on their line of march, where there is any danger of a torrent washing down through a sudden downpour of rain. I came across one of these tunnels at Subilan, near Tarkwa, which measured thirty-two feet in length, and within this length I found several perpendicular air emergency, or escape, shafts, measuring eight, fourteen and eighteen inches deep, sunk below the surface. They were passed at a little distance from a position where a possible washout might occur.

These ants possess extraordinary powers of communicating with one another. In watching their movements I have noted the rapidity with which the ants forming the rear section of a procession become aware of any interruption to their advance column a long way ahead. They appear to have system of instantly telegraphing the news up and down the line; for all the fighting ants become excited and rush forward to give battle or to investigate.

I tested this upon one occasion by placing a find one hundred yards ahead in their procession, and told him on a given signal to break their line, while I timed with a watch how long it took before a commotion transpired among the ants passing where I stood.

In ten seconds from the time my friend called out, all was bustle and excitement; the carriers halted, but the warrior ants rushed forward, showing clearly that they were aware of trouble ahead.

An African Horned Adder Attacked, Killed and Finally Eaten by a Marching Army of Driver Ants.

While I was travelling a bush path near Benau, in the Gold Coast Colony, during the dry season, I suddenly warned not to quit the path and make a detour to avoid an open, dry, sandy spot in the road, saying that a big pasaver of ants was taking place, as they were placing a new king on the throne, and if we disturbed them they would "eat us."

The ground in front of [illegible] black with ants, and [illegible] them were pouring in from all sides. In the centre of this living mass was a small open space, encircled with rings of ants, all facing outward, with their nippers ready. There were several clean-cut tracks, quite stationary, the ants appearing to be guarding the centre, in which were half adozen larger ants of slighter color than the rest. These evidently were important individuals.

I once witnessed a fierce fight between a horned adder and a swarm of Driver Ants. The snake had evidently been attacked while asleep, its skin and was struggling frantically amidst a dense [illegible] which covered every portion of its body. They were furiously hanging on with their sharp pincers, and every second a fresh ant fixed its grip. The snake writhed and squirmed about among its impossible enemies for fully a quarter of an hour, and then its struggles became feebler, and it stretched its length on the ground. In a very few minutes its body was covered two inches deep with ants tearing and cutting away its flesh.

To Make Ancient Babylonia a Great Garden Once More.

How the Young Turks' Gigantic Scheme of Irrigating the Wastes Between the Euphrates and Tigris Rivers Is Making One of the Most Famous Bible Lands Blossom Again Like a Rose.

WHAT feat of modern engineering could have a more universal romantic interest than that which would restore to a desert waste more than twenty centuries old all the fertility, prosperity and charm of the chief garden spot of the ancient world—Babylonia? For thousands of years prior to and during the reign of Nebuchadnezzar this fertile region, watered by the rivers Euphrates and Tigris, was an inexhaustible granary, supporting a population of as many as 25,000,000 people.

Here, say legends credited by many historians, was located the Garden of Gardens—Eden. That upon this spot the human race was cradled is shown by records dug from the ruins of its ancient cities—Babylon, Nineveh, Nippur; cities so [illegible] that, in the case of Nippur explicitly, they were rebuilt half a dozen times, each time upon the ruins of the last. That the agricultural resources of Babylonia were unrivalled in those times, or in these, is evidenced by the vastness of those cities and the unparalleled luxuries and wealth they contained.

The capital city of Babylon—built by Nebuchadnezzar to eclipse in size and in every other way the marvellous ancient capital, Nineveh—was fifteen miles square within its massive walls, entered by its hundred gates of brass. The broad Euphrates flowed through its centre, spanned by bridges, overshadowed by the wonderful hanging gardens. All this grandeur—which civilization has never equalled—was made possible by the immense productiveness of the soil on both sides of and between the Euphrates and the Tigris.

Then came Cyrus to overthrow King Belshazzar for his wickedness, as the Bible tells us; and in a few centuries Babylon lapsed into the ruins and the once fertile province into the desolate waste they have remained to this day, inhabited by only a few hundred thousand miserable nomads.

Now, imagine modern science, with its magic wand of engineering skill and unlimited funds, waving back to this desert all its ancient fertility, more than its ancient population and prosperity—perhaps even a great new Babylon, with architecture as imposing as the famed Hanging Gardens of Nebuchadnezzar—for that is exactly what is promised in the plans of the Turkish Government, prepared in detail by the celebrated British engineer, Sir William Willcocks.

Since the old Sultan, Abdul Hamid, was deposed by the Young Turks Turkey has come to life—a modern nation, capably ruled and eager to redeem itself from the dry rot of the old regime. The Ottoman Empire includes this Euphrates and Tigris region, that was so long the world's finest garden spot, and the Young Turks realize that here is their opportunity to add brilliantly to their country's resources and prestige.

It is entirely a question of irrigation—as in the case of Egypt, where the damming of the Nile at Assouan has added to the old area of arable land many thousands of acres.

While the Babylonian Empire lasted its primitive system of irrigation held back the encroachments of the desert. Its canals running inland from the rivers were still capable of repair when, in the last years of his life, Alexander began operations to rebuild Babylon and restore the productiveness of the surrounding country.

These old canals led the water from the two great rivers to water the fields for miles in the interior. They were so deep as to be navigable by the small boats of that time. The Ballacopus Canal, in the time of Alexander the Great, was 300 miles long, and the Nahrawan Canal, on the left bank of the Tigris, extended 160 miles. Unfortunately these canals were allowed to fill up, almost without exception, and the result was the cutting off of the water supply from thousands of acres of fertile fields.

Sir William Willcocks has outlined a plan for the re-establishment of the system of irrigation upon an even more elaborate system than that used in ancient times. He has divided the country into six districts, which he proposes to develop, one at a time. It is true that his entire plan calls for the expenditure of $140,000,000, but when fully in operation the annual yield of crops will be worth almost as much as the total cost of the improvements, so it will not require a very long time for the government to be recouped for all expenditures. This is especially the case as Sir William proposes to do his work district by district, thus making the improvement of one section pay for the next, and so on.

At present only the land immediately contiguous to the two great rivers is fertile. Grain is sown in the Autumn, the land is watered by the Winter rains as late as March or April, and then the Euphrates and Tigris, swollen by the melting snows of the mountains come down, swollen to the brink, to water the land near them. By May the harvest is ripe, and then the rivers begin to fall.

In ancient times the water coming down at flood time was led off into the canals, there to spread moisture and fertility for miles around. But Sir William Willcocks desires to improve on the old methods, and by a system of dams hold the water so that there may be at least two crops a year grown on the irrigated land, which is fully rich enough to do the work if properly moistened.

The actual sites of Babylon, Nineveh, Nippur and other ancient cities in this region, however, have small possibilities in connection with the proposed agricultural restoration. As the Bible says:

"Her cities are a desolation, a dry land and wilderness, a land wherein no man dwelleth."

The soil for miles around where once these great cities stood consists of the grit and clay formed by the decomposition of the buildings, and contains no principle friendly to vegetation.

Babylon itself, whose walls included a stretch of the Euphrates, is still the logical site of the principal city of the country. Out of wealth wrung from the restored productiveness of the land, why should not Babylon itself be restored? The Turks are by no means lacking in the spirit of romance or in their appreciation of luxury and splendor.

IF YOU hear that your father or mother or some other must undergo a dreadful surgical operation, you have at least one comfort. The patient will feel no pain The result may be death or cure.

In any case, the agony of the knife, the dreadful suffering of the old-fashioned operation when the patient was tied down and gagged—all that has disappeared forever.

Surgeons can now operate deliberately, carefully. And the body of the patient lies before them without feeling. The spirit, as though it were in another world, knows no pain and cannot believe when consciousness returns that the operation has been performed.

When William T. G. Morton was born, in Massachusetts, on August 19, 1819—less than one hundred years ago—every patient compelled to submit to the surgeon's knife suffered physical agony, intensified by mental agony—in anticipation.

And when this very great hero of the world of science died, only forty-eight years of age, in New York City, PAIN HAD VANISHED FOREVER FROM THE SURGEON'S TABLE. Science had learned to disconnect the brain and the nerves and to make the body of a patient as insensible to pain as the table upon which the body lies.

On the tomb of Morton—a monument erected to his memory by citizens of Boston—there is this inscription:

> WILLIAM THOMAS GREEN MORTON, M. D.,
> DISCOVERER OF SURGICAL ANESTHESIA.
> "By whom pain in surgery was averted and annulled.
> Before whom, in all time, surgery was agony.
> Since whom science has control of pain."

* * *

The monument bearing that inscription is the monument of a hero as far above the fighting, bloody heroes of the battlefield as kindness is above brutality, real courage above bravado and empty love of admiration.

Morton conquered pain for this world; he was the great pioneer and soldier in the war against suffering—a war in which there have been many heroes working in many ways.

Already millions upon millions of human beings have escaped suffering, thanks to this man's work and courage, and many hundreds of millions will be blessed by him in future.

* * *

We would not for a moment discourage in any way the well-meaning kindness of the professional anti-vivisectionist. But we think that those who grow frantic about the sufferings of the guinea pig—which, by the way, does not suffer when unconscious—will find food for thought in the life of Morton.

As in all great work, Morton shares the honor of discovering anaesthesia, with others, particularly with Dr. Charles T. Jackson, the chemist, and Dr. Horace Wells, of Hartford. These two men, perhaps, understood as early as Dr. Morton, or even earlier, the possibility of deadening the nerves with the use of sulphuric ether.

BUT MORTON IS THE MAN WHO ACTUALLY DID IT, AND HE HAD THE COURAGE TO EXPERIMENT UPON HIMSELF, UPON HIS OWN BODY.

This is the story—more important to this world, more important to every suffering creature, than all the achievements of all the heroes that ever rode over bloody battlefields into bloody graves.

Morton was a student in the Harvard Medical School. He had already studied dentistry in the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery.

He was a poor boy, his father having failed in business, and he earned the money with which he got his education. Remember that, young men, when you talk about "lack of opportunity."

He had begun to practise as a dentist, when he entered the Harvard Medical School to take a regular course and fit himself for work as a physician.

* * *

He was impressed and made sorrowful by the extreme pain attending severe dental operations. In those days teeth were pulled with what was called a "key." The key was fastened to the tooth, and the dentist, with the exercise of all his muscles, turned the tooth around in the socket and then pulled it out—a horrible performance, meaning agony. And as the dentists had not yet learned to save the teeth, a large part of their business was pulling them.

Dr. Morton had heard, or had read, that certain gases rendered an animal or a human being unconscious—deadened the nerves and stopped sensation.

He tried experiments upon insects, fish, dogs, and finally upon himself.

His spaniel had inhaled sulphuric ether, had gone to sleep, and then came back to life again, apparently unharmed.

Morton, with the real courage of the investigator, determined that human beings must have the benefit of this discovery.

And he decided, also, that HE would be the first human being to make the experiment and run the risk. This is how the great experiment was made, as described in a memoir presented to the Academy of Arts and Sciences at Paris by M. Arago:

> Taking the tube and flask, I shut myself up in my room, seated myself in the operating chair, and commenced inhaling. I found the ether so strong that it partially suffocated me, but produced no decided effect. I then saturated my handkerchief and inhaled it from that. I looked at my watch, and soon lost consciousness. As I recovered, I felt a numbness in my limbs, with a sensation like nightmare, and would have given the world for some one to come and arouse me. I thought for a moment I should die in that state and the world would only pity or ridicule my folly. At length I felt a slight tingling of the blood in the end of my third finger, and made an effort to touch it with my thumb, but without success. At a second effort, I touched it, but there seemed to be no sensation. I gradually raised my arm and pinched my thigh, but I could see that sensation was imperfect. I attempted to rise from my chair, but fell back. Gradually I regained power over my limbs and found that I had been insensible between seven and eight minutes

EXPERIMENTS UPON OTHERS.—Delighted with the success of this experiment, I immediately announced the result to the persons employed in my establishment, and waited impatiently for some one upon whom I could make a fuller trial. Toward evening a man residing in Boston came in, suffering great pain, and wishing to have a tooth extracted. He was afraid of the operation, and asked if he could be mesmerized. I told him I had something better, and, saturating my handkerchief, gave it to him to inhale. He became unconscious almost immediately. It was dark, and Dr. Hayden held the lamp while I extracted a firmly rooted bicuspid tooth. There was not much alteration in the pulse, and no relaxing of the muscles. He recovered in a minute, and knew nothing of what had been done for him. He remained for some time talking about the experiment. This was on the 30th of September, 1846

* * *

That was, so far as is known, the first operation ever performed upon a human being without any suffering.

There have been millions of such operations since, and there will be many thousands of millions in the future.

Incredulity, satire, and the usual greeting which ignorance and envy prepare for intelligence, followed the announcement of Morton's great achievement.

And on October 16, 1846—a little more than half a century ago—the first public demonstration of SURGERY, without pain, occurred in the presence of the surgical and medical staff in a crowded amphitheatre.

Here is the story as told by Dr. Morton's son:

> FIRST PUBLIC DEMONSTRATION OF SURGICAL ANESTHESIA.—It was a trying moment to this medical student when he determined to exhibit his discovery of practical ether anesthesia before his classmates, professors, and the public. But so convinced was he, by reason of his experience gained in private practice, of success, that he was willing to face this ordeal. Morton came into the amphitheatre late, delayed by waiting for the completion of a new inhaler. Just a few minutes before Dr. Warren had remarked, "As Dr. Morton has not arrived, I presume he is otherwise engaged," apparently conveying the idea that Dr. Morton was not likely to appear. As he was about to proceed with his operation Morton entered. Amidst that sea of faces he saw not one which was sympathizing. Blank incredulity, or at the best curiosity, alone was to be seen. Warren, turning to him, remarked, "Well, sir, your patient is ready." Adjusting his apparatus, Morton calmly administered the anesthetic, and, turning to Dr. Warren, said "Dr. Warren, your patient is ready." The silence of the tomb reigned in the large amphitheatre while Dr. Warren made his first incision through the skin and dissected out a large tumor, while the patient made no sign nor moved a muscle of his body. When the operation was completed Dr. Warren turned to the audience and said slowly and emphatically: "Gentlemen, this is no humbug," and Bigelow remarked, "I have seen something to-day that will go around the world."

That one overwhelming demonstration, refuting criticism, and making doubt ridiculous, put an end to the greatest of physical suffering in this world.

Morton, who had been studying for only two years, was compelled to stop and devote his energies and what remained of his short life to the wonderful task that he had created.

Oliver Wendell Holmes, after that first experiment, wrote:

> The knife is searching for disease—the pulleys are dragging back dislocated limbs—Nature herself is working out the primal curse which doomed the tenderest of her creatures to the sharpest of her trials, but the fierce extremity of suffering has been steeped in the

REMEMBER: NO FILTH NO FLIES

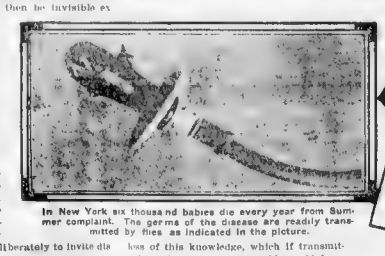
One of the Post Cards Used by the American Civic Association in Its Wide-Spread Fly-Fighting Campaign



In New York six thousand babies die every year from Summer complaint. The germs of the disease are readily transmitted by flies as indicated in the picture.

THE health record of the house fly cannot be overstimated. The public must be warned against the grave consequences of our present fly-infected foods and from the possible carriage of disease by means of flies, even where foods are carefully protected. The transmission of the following diseases by means of flies has been conclusively proven: Typhoid fever, tuberculosis, cholera, Oriental plague, inflammation of the eyelids, serious infection of wounds, Summer diarrhoea of children, [illegible] in this way.

Typhoid fever and Summer diarrhoea of children in this country, and cholera and Oriental plague in the countries in which those diseases exist, may be transmitted through the various foods that are eaten in an uncooked state, if infected by flies, through cooked foods infected by flies after the [illegible] through drinking water [illegible] infected by flies and through milk which has been infected by flies. [illegible] especially likely to be infected by the small fruit fly commonly found around markets and stands. Fish may be infected by flies, and in consequence will and [illegible] decomposition. Decomposition caused in this way has resulted in many cases of diarrhoea and dysentery. What is commonly known as fly speck is the excreta [illegible] and frequently contains virulent [illegible]. These specks are often found on fruits that have not been properly protected.

Transmission of disease may also occur by the infection of open wounds through contact with infected flies. This is true of all pus formations in wounds. The simple contact of a fly infected with the disease may cause Oriental plague, sore eyes, and possibly granular eyelids. A fly infected with dysentery or typhoid fever may cause either of those diseases by simply coming in contact with the lips of susceptible persons.

The fly in the house should be relentlessly pursued and destroyed. The house carefully screened and protected [illegible] is infinitely safer than one not so protected. In the Spring of the year the house fly begins to take on life. Eggs which were laid the previous Fall begin to hatch. At first the fly is only a little worm wriggling in some pile of filth. The eggs are usually laid and the grub developed in a manure pile or some mass of garbage or other filth. Before the grub develops into the fly it is easily destroyed. If everything in and about the house were kept scrupulously clean, and if every manure pile were kept carefully screened or covered so as to protect it from flies, there would be no difficulty in preventing the fly nuisance. The most effective way to prevent the nuisance is to destroy the breeding places. The importance of this may be seen when it is considered that one fly produces 1 [illegible] or more of its kind in one season.

IN the past ten years over 180,000 persons in New York city alone have died from diseases which it has been conclusively proven may be transmitted by flies. This is one-fifth of the total mortality in the city during that period.

In the records of the Health Department the cause of death in those 180,000 cases was variously given as tuberculosis, typhoid fever and Summer complaint, but recent research warrants the assertion that none of those diseases could possibly have claimed the death toll they did but for the activity of the ordinary house fly.

The house fly is the greatest single menace to human health against which we have to contend. It is bred in filth, sustained by filth and carries filth everywhere it goes.

Every time a house fly crawls into the garbage can, it gathers thousands, sometimes millions, of disease bearing germs on its hairy legs and body.

Every time the fly flies from the garbage can to the table, it drops thousands of those invisible germs on the food it touches.

Poisoning Our Food

Every time one eats anything which a fly has touched he takes into his system bacteria enough to infect him with one of a dozen virulent diseases, of which typhoid fever, tuberculosis and Summer complaint of children are the most deadly.

Were it not for the tremendous disease resisting power of the healthy human organism, the house fly would long since have exterminated the human race. As it is thousands and tens of thousands die annually from diseases directly traceable to the common house fly.

These are the conclusions resulting from a bare ten years of investigation and research by eminent scientific workers under the auspices of the United States Department of Agriculture, the British government, the Colonial government of India, and the authorities of numerous other countries.

A dozen years ago nobody suspected that the fly was anything more than an annoying but harmless pest, and the mischievous boy who raised his hand to swat the "innocent insect" was reprimanded for his cruelty. Today the tiny insect is recognized as the most dangerous wild animal in the world, and "swat the fly" is the slogan hurled from every platform and pulpit the world over.

It is difficult to realize the danger that lies in such a minute creature as the fly. If the insect could be magnified to the size of a hen and the germs which it carries enlarged proportionately, these death dealing bacteria would even then be invisible except with the microscope. Under those circumstances, however, even the naked eye would detect the nauseating filth with which the fly's body and legs are always liberally smeared, and nobody would dream of letting the baby drink the milk that a fly of that size had fallen into. To feed a child milk in which even a single fly has been immersed for only a few seconds, is deliberately to invite disaster.

What happens when a fly drops into the milk is strikingly illustrated in experiments made by two eminent bacteriologists, W. N. Esten and C. J. Mason, as reported by Dr. Howard. Eighteen flies found hovering about a garbage can were caught with a sterilized bottle into which was poured sterilized water. The bottle was shaken a moment so that the bacteria were washed from the bodies of the insects just as they are washed off when the fly is struggling in the milk pitcher. A careful count of the bacteria in a given quantity of the water thus contaminated showed 313,800,000 germs, of which considerably more than half were of disease-producing types—an average of 5,600,000 germs per fly. From another catch of ninety four flies found near a swill barrel 1,650,000 germs per fly were obtained. In all 414 flies were caught and tested for bacteria, producing an average of almost 1,250,000 on the body and legs of every fly.

While modern science has only thus recently demonstrated the potentialities for evil of the house fly there is reason to believe that the ancient Egyptians, whose wisdom covered a wider scope than is generally supposed, knew and recognized the fly as a menace to life and health. The loss of this knowledge, which if transmitted to the rest of the world would have saved millions of human beings from untimely deaths, may well be accounted one of the calamities to humanity that resulted from the destruction by the Mohammedans of the great library of Alexandria, wherein were preserved the archives and secrets of the oldest civilizations of the world. In the book of Exodus the plague of flies that was visited upon the Egyptians is recorded in terms which indicate that the writer regarded the insects as something more than mere nuisances, for he says: "The land was corrupted by reason of the swarm of flies." And in the same volume we read of the god of the Canaanites "Beelzebub," which means literally "Prince of flies," and which has become a synonym for the devil himself.

Our soldiers died by hundreds of typhoid fever in the camps at Chickamauga and Camp Alger during the Spanish war. Modern science had not then learned what was found a little later to be true—that it was the flies that carried the disease and caused the tremendous mortality among the troops. It was recalled afterward, when an investigation was being made into the causes of typhoid, that flies with their feet whitened by the lime that had been used to disinfect the pits and trenches had been frequently noticed walking over the food that the soldiers ate. The officers' mess tents were protected by screens and the officers suffered proportionately very much less from typhoid than did the enlisted men. And the best proof of all of the complicity of the fly in the typhoid epidemic was the fact that when the fly disappeared with the approach of cold weather the disease also disappeared. Typhoid had always been known as a hot weather disease, although there was no apparent reason why the tiny bacillus which conveys this infection should be more active at one temperature than at another. It was the suspicion that the fly might have had something to do with it that led to the investigations which have resulted in an unshakable indictment being drawn up against the insect—an indictment which justifies the charge made by Dr. S. J. Crumbine, secretary of the Kansas State Board of Health, that "Flies killed more American soldiers than all the Spanish bullets in 1908."

Public attention was first called to the fly as a disease carrier by the researches directed by Mr. Edward Hatch, Jr., and Mr. Hatch is today the moving spirit and leader of the great national campaign against the fly. As chairman of the Fly Fighting Committee of the American Civic Association he is in constant touch with civic organizations, health departments and others who are working for the common welfare, and from his office at No. 156 Fifth avenue, this greatest of all modern warfares for the protection and preservation of the race is directed and guided. Stimulated by the revelations of the disease-carrying nature of the flies that breed and feed upon the sewage along New York's water front, the city's health department is increasing every year its efforts to enforce the ordinances and regulations which forbid the exposing of any kind of food where flies may light upon it or the sale of such food after it has been exposed to contamination. And New York's example is being followed in the other great cities of the United States. Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and many smaller communities are waging effective warfare upon the fly.

The pamphlet issued by the health authorities of the city of Milwaukee contains some very striking epigrams regarding the fly menace.

"It is better," they say, "to screen the cradle and wear a smile than scoff at the precaution and wear mourning."

"Flies in the dining room usually precede nurses in the sick room."

But perhaps the complete solution of the fly problem whether in city or country rests largely with the individual householder.

It is no longer possible in these enlightened days, when plenty of fresh air and sunshine are recognized essentials for hygienic living, to keep windows and doors tightly closed in the effort to bar the flies out of the house or even away from an entire neighborhood when once the means of doing so are understood. It has always been a reproach to the good housekeeper to find a fly in her house. In the light of modern science the presence of flies is an even more serious reproach, for it indicates not only ignorance or carelessness, or both, but demonstrates the presence, either in the house or in the immediate vicinity, of filth. For the fly is not only hatched in filth, usually decaying animal refuse, but it seeks out filth as its feeding place and playground.

Precautions for the Home.

Ninety per cent. of all the flies come from horse stables. This is true everywhere except in New York city, where the tides deposit decaying refuse in a continuous pile around the shores of Manhattan Island, and so provide the principal breeding place for the Gotham fly. But unless one lives near a stable or close to the water front the chances are that the flies in that particular house come from the garbage can—one's own or one's neighbor's.

If all windows are tightly screened and garbage cans kept clean the fly nuisance can be largely guarded against. But the most important protective measure is to kill the early flies before they have a chance to multiply. The first flies of the Spring are those which have hibernated during the Winter in warm dark cracks and crevices. The female fly emerges from her Winter hiding place ready to lay 120 eggs in the first sufficiently filthy repository she can find. Twenty generations or more may be the offspring of one pair of flies in a single season. If all the eggs hatched and all the flies lived the possible result would be literally octillions of flies. But even such a conservative scientist as Dr. Howard calculates the actual annual average progeny of a single pair of flies at about 8,000,000. Every fly killed before the first of June is worth thousands slaughtered in July and millions in September.

All over the country the war on the fly is taking the form of organized local campaigns. The boy scout organizations in many communities have enlisted in the war and have taken part in the trapping and slaughter of flies and the cleaning up of towns a vent for much boyish enthusiasm and energy that might otherwise express itself in mischief. Prizes for the largest number of flies caught in a given time are a favorite means of stimulating interest in the effort to exterminate the pest. In Washington, D. C., last year, more than 8,000,000 flies were killed in three weeks, the boy who won the first prize of $25 bringing in a bag of 375,000 flies. In the city of Baltimore, where ten cents a quart was paid by a local association for flies killed, eight barrels of the small insects were destroyed. This year more than 800 cities are organizing active anti-fly campaigns and contests, and tens of thousands of children are learning the lesson of the fly's danger to the community.

The slogan of this modern crusade is the epigramatic injunction originated by Dr. Crumbine and now a national watchword wherever the soldiers of the common good are fighting the enemy:

THE MAN WHO SAVED MILLIONS FROM PAIN

waters of forgetfulness, and the deepest furrow in the knotted brow of agony has been smoothed forever.

* * *

Morton, who saved the world from pain and fear, has a simple little monument in a small cemetery, while dosens of men that did nothing but inflict poverty, bloodshed, suffering and war upon their fellow beings have the great monuments and are called the heroes of the world.

But the real heroes are the men of the type of Morton, the man brave enough to try the experiment upon himself before trying it upon other men.

Sooner or later the world will recognize this, and the big monuments and the big rewards will be for those that have helped their fellow men, and not for those that have killed or coerced or cheated their fellow men.

In the history of Morton there is a lesson and also consolation for the anti-vivisectionist. For while his discovery stimulated vivisection, and gave cures for many diseases, it also MADE VIVISECTION PAINLESS.

It must comfort the anti-vivisectionist to know that the animal undergoing an operation FEELS NO PAIN.

There are animals that have been operated upon forty times and that have never known the sensation of pain, or suffering—thanks to this great discovery.

This consoling fact should leave the anti-vivisectionists free to use their energies in defence of those that actually do FEEL PAIN AND ENDURE AGONY.

There is no anesthesia, no soothing ether that will save from pain the mother watching her chield die because she can't feed it properly, or protect it from consumption.

And there is no easing of pain, when animals are tortured for sport—as in the pigeon shooting which this newspaper has succeeded in preventing practically throughout the United States.

Let the anti-vivisectionists turn their thoughts to women and what they suffer in childbirth and in the bringing up of children under the hard grind of poverty.

Let them, if their sympathies are chiefly with animals, consider the unfortunate frogs that are put alive on hooks in the catching of fish, and the worms that are put alive on those hooks, and the other miserable creatures made to endure agony, in the pursuit of "sport."

And let them also do what they can to introduce humane methods into the slaughtering of animals.

It should be possible to deaden all pain in the sheep before its throat is cut, and in the ox and the hog before the blow of the axe on the cut of the knife.

* * *

There is plenty for kind hearts to do—let them fight REAL suffering, and not exhaust themselves in attacks upon science, which in one week of painless experiment may destroy such a dreadful disease as cancer, as it has practically destroyed diphtheria that killed so many thousands of children.

And let the world honor the men of science, the heroes, the explorers, the conquerors of knowledge, like this man Morton.

They are the real heroes, the real benefactors of mankind.

HEINE—That was a howling swell affair society gave the other day.

HONUS—Where was that?

HEINE—At the Hotel Vander-bilk.

HONUS—Was you there?

HEINE—I should say not. It was a luncheon given by a half a dozen society women in honor of their pups.

HONUS—You mean their husbands?

HEINE—No. Their dogs. Dog luncheons and Klondike dinner parties are quite the thing nowadays. If you ain't invited out to sit down and eat with a dog you ain't in snappy society at all.

HONUS—That's why there are so many divorces in society.

HEINE—Why?

HONUS—Society women treat their nuts better than their husbands.

HEINE—Well, do you think that it would be better if a society woman treated her husband like a dog?

HONUS—Sure. When a man marries a society woman nowadays the dog has got all the best of it. She calls the dog pet names, she takes him out automobiling, she invites him to swell dinners, she even lets her dog lick her when he wants to, and you bet she wouldn't let her husband do that.

HEINE—It might be a good thing if he did.

HONUS—He ain't got a chance. She wouldn't even let him lick the dog.

HEINE—You can't blame him for wanting to take to the club.

HONUS—There is only one way in which she allows her husband to be on the same footing as a dog.

HEINE—And what is that?

HONUS—She makes him work like one.

HEINE—That's where I give the ministers credit. They are speaking against dog dinners.

HONUS—You can't blame them. Lots of our swell ministers like to attend society dinners themselves and they don't like to see them going to the dogs. How would you feel to have your appetite all saved up for an elaborate dinner and have it called off at the last minute because the guest of honor had the mange?

HEINE—Besides such a dinner would have too much of a curry flavor.

HONUS—That is the least. Suppose you attended a banquet at the St. Reckless and the party you had to take in to dinner had fleas?

HEINE—It would be even worse if you invited your neighbor to have a bite of a stew and she took a bite out of your leg.

HONUS—But there's one good thing. Society women don't give dinners to monkeys any more.

HEINE—They don't have to. They give dinners to dogs and make monkeys out of themselves.

HONUS—I tell you one thing, Heine, if rich people don't stop giving dog luncheons and things like that, it's going to come to a terrible continuation.

HONUS—And how is that?

HEINE—Do what the Eugenists say.

HONUS—And what is a Eugenist?

HEINE—Eugenist is a fellow that tells you whether you should be born or not.

HONUS—What does Eugene know about it?

HEINE—Not Eugene. Eugenist. He knows more about your parents than you do yourself. All he's got to do is to look at you and your wife and he can tell right away whether your children are going to be burglars, politicians or honest men.

HONUS—I see. I see. Then if a Eugenius had seen your parents before you did, they would have been saved all the trouble.

HEINE—You don't understand. What the Eugenist says is that parents should be selected scientifically. Everything must be done to improve the breed. Children should be raised with the same care and attention that we give to bringing up dogs, cows and horses.

HONUS—But how many children would like to be brought up like a horse?

HEINE—You don't bring 'em up like a horse.

HONUS—Well, what do you do?

HEINE—You pick out parents for the child so that the offspring will be stronger and healthier than if he parents did their own picking.

HONUS—My parents are good enough for me. I wouldn't let no Eugenius or anybody else pick out parents for me.

HEINE—You don't have nothing to say about it. A Eugenist is a smart man. He has studied the subject for years. And he knows just what kind of parents you ought to have. And what they want is to have the Government let them oversee all marriages so that nobody can be born unless their parents are guaranteed.

HONUS—You mean they want to have the right to say whether I'm going to be born or not?

HEINE—Exactly.

HONUS—And before we can have a child we got to get an O. K. from them?

HEINE—Yes.

HONUS—And I couldn't be a father to my own children without their permission?

HEINE—That's the idea. And let me tell you if ever the Eugenists get in charge it will be pretty tough for you.

HONUS—Why for me?

HEINE—Because you see they wouldn't allow the feeble-minded to get married or have children.

HONUS—But everybody that gets married is feeble-minded.

HEINE—That's very true. But what they want to do is to make everybody submit to an examination before they get married. And if they can't get a clean bill of health—no wedding bells for them.

HONUS—According to that you'd have to train to get married just like training for a prize fight.

HEINE—Ain't one pretty nearly the same as another?

HONUS—No.

HEINE—Why not?

HONUS—In a prizefight they don't let it go more than [illegible] rounds and [illegible] brutal it is stopped by the police, but in marriages no matter how one-sided and brutal it is it's got to go to a finish.

HEINE—[illegible] And let me tell you they've got the right idea. According to them, before you can make love to a girl you got to produce a certificate from a doctor showing that you are sound in wind and in limb, and before she can make love to you she's got to show you the same kind of a certificate. And if either one of you can't produce such a certificate you can't get married.

HONUS—Imagine a fellow falling in love with a girl who can't get a certificate. Instead of sending her billet doux and candy he'd be sending her prescriptions and pill's.

HONUS—When a fellow's in love what does he care for the race?

HEINE—That's just the trouble. That's why the race is producing such bum stock. If the principles of Eugenicism were carried out you'd have to prove that you was fit in every way to improve the race before she would marry you.

HONUS—That would be an awful thing.

HEINE—Why?

HONUS—How would a fellow feel when he proposed to a girl to have to go down on his knees and say: "Darling, my lungs are good, my liver is fine, my pulse is seventy-two, my circulation is great, my temperature (until I look at you) is ninety in the shade, and my digestion is perfect. Be mine!" And she would answer, "Sweetheart, I can never be yours. I love you, but I got the pip."

Her Wedding Invitations.

AT the wedding reception the young man remarked: "Wasn't it annoying the way that baby cried during the whole ceremony!"

It was simply dreadful" replied the prim little maid of honor "and when I get married I'm going to have engraved right in the corner of the invitations: 'No babies expected.'"

Her Family.

AN artist who occupied a studio on the top floor of a large building was always friendly with the woman who cleaned his rooms.

"How many children have you, Molly?" he asked one morning as she was polishing the floor.

"It's elven I have, sir, thank ye for askin'. It's lucky I am, sir, bless 'em. I have four be the third wife of me second husband and three be the second wife of me first."

Bent on Being a Girl.

THERE was a dear little baby on the corridor car, and an elderly man stopped to peek a boo at it.

"A fine youngster," he said to his demure mother. "I hope you will bring him up to be an upright, consc ientious man."

"Yes," smiled the young mother, "but I'm afraid it will be a bit difficult.

"Why?" said he.

"As the twig is bent, so is the tree inclined.

"I know it," agreed the mother, "but the trouble is, this twig is bent on being a girl."

Following Instructions.

OLD HOUSEKEEPER (to young lewis, arrived servant)—And now, Mary, you will remember, Mary, that if you should ever have occasion to speak to the Duke you must be sure to say "Your Grace."

Kindly it be sneezing the new broom on the stairs. Well, Mary, how are you getting on?"

Mary—Oh, sir, for what we are about to receive may the Lord make us truly thankful. Amen.

Where the Fault Lay.

"TOMMY, that is the last helping of plum-puding I shall give you!"

So spoke Tommy's mother. Tommy grunted. Why? Because he was a little hog.

Once upon a time, Tommy," continued his mother, "there was a little boy who kept on eating more and more plum-pudding till he burst! He died, Tommy, from eating too much plum-pudding."

Tommy flushed his helping.

"Ain't such a thing as too much plum pudding," he murmured, tightly.

"Well, then," said his mother, "why did the little boy burst?"

"Not enuff boy!" remarked Tommy, and he passed his plate over again.

Revenge.

A YOUNG MAN had taken his wife to a show; and as there was no one to look after the baby, they had brought it along. It cried lustily all through the first act. At the close of the act an usher came down the aisle and informed them that if they could not keep the baby quiet they would have to go to the box office, get their money back and go out.

They succeeded in squelching the baby, and all went well for a time.

Then, five minutes after the last act had commenced, the young father leaned over and said:

"How do you like the show?"

"Rotten!" was the reply.

"Stick a pin in the baby!"

Technical.

A PROMINENT bridge player went to her doctor before taking an ocean trip and asked: "Doctor, I want to ward off seasickness on this trip so that I can play bridge and enjoy myself. Now, some of my friends say I should eat all I want and others say I shouldn't eat a thing. Which should I do?"

"Well, ma'am," replied the doctor, thoughtfully, "it's only a question of whether you prefer to discard from strength or weakness."

Married Life the Twelfth Week

NOTE.—In all stories you read of "Married Life in the Nineteenth Year," "Why I Left My Home" and all that sort of thing, you never hear of the poor husband. Perhaps he is too busy to write; perhaps nobody cares about him anyway. Here for the first time we have a husband giving his views of married life in the way so many women have been doing of late.

By ROBERT SHERBERT TURNER.

AS readers of my autobiography have noticed there hasn't been a lot of the "in-law" stuff in it. Lucy's mother only got mixed up in the family affairs once, and my people hadn't been mixed up in them at all.

Father-in-law are never mentioned in any of the articles I have read, but my own father was the cause of a family jar on this case.

I was coming home by the 6 o'clock train when I met him near the ferry. I hadn't seen much of him for some time and he invited me to stay to dinner with him in town.

"Got to get home or Lucy will raise cain," I replied.

"What's the matter with you," asked the old man. "Do you mean to say you're afraid to stay out to dinner one night with your own father?"

"Well, I'm not exactly afraid," said I.

No, just scared to death," answered the O. M. "You're a fine young fellow to start off your married life that way. Be boss in your home from the start. That's the way I always was."

I didn't contradict the O. M., but I couldn't help thinking of times when he didn't seem to be exactly the boss around the house, and I couldn't help wondering why he was so brave on this occasion. I found out later that my mother had gone up-State that morning on a week's visit to some relatives.

So I stayed in town, and when I got home Lucy asked me "if I had been working late in the office."

No," said I, "not this time."

Not this time," replied Lucy, "nor any other time, I'm sure. However, since you admit you weren't in the office, perhaps you will go so far as to tell me in what disreputable company you spent the hours you should have spent at home with your wife."

"Disreputable company nothing," I answered with heat. "I was with my father."

"Your father!" said Lucy in the tone in which she might have exclaimed "a burglar!" or "a murderer!"

"Yes, my father," I replied. "Have you anything to say about it?"

"Yes, just a little to say about it. I guess," snapped Lucy. "Yes, I have a few words to say about it," and she did.

I saw the O. M. next day.

"Lucy's mad with you," said "She has a few words to say to you, she says."

"Tut, tut," said the O. M. "What do I care? We men must be the heads of the homes of America. I'll soon show your wife how she should be treated, and would be if you had any spirit. Let her come around and see me any time she likes."

Two days later I met the O. M. near the ferry.

"Hey, young fellow," he shouted at me, "you just keep that wife of yours at home in future. She chased me out of my own house."

But you told me to let her come around," I began.

Further Adventures of Harold Hangover

CHAPTER V

HAROLD HANGOVER was about to have his morning bath. One of June's gentlest breezes flirted with his curly locks, and in a nearby tree a robin laughed joyously. It was certainly a ripping morning, the robin reflected, to see a baseball player takin, a plunge in the morning, when they are compelled, a l of them, to take their afternoon showers.

The telephone rang.

Harold Hangover, on the verge of climbing into the bathtub, gave a nervous start. Our hero never liked to hear a telephone bell ringing. Somehow, it always reminded him of the time that the Sheriff of Fan Claire County had called up his father's home and had come later to seize said father and a sorrel horse.

However, he went to the 'phone, and after hearing what the telephone girl had to say, he chuckled "Send him up!" His visitor was no other than John J. McGraw.

"It's funny how they all come back to see you," mused the great Oshkosh pitcher, while waiting for McGraw to come up. "When I first joined the Giants two weeks ago I could hardly get a pleasant smile from Mister McGraw. Now he is coming to my own apartment in my hotel. I must put away my two soiled handkerchiefs and my soiled shirt, lest I incur the displeasure of such a neat little general."

When the leader of the Giants entered the rooms of the great Oshkosh pitcher he found the latter in his bath. Harold Hangover was not the man to make light of real opportunities, and he was certainly giving the hot and cold water fan cets a merry game.

"Good morning, Mr. McGraw!" chortled our Oshkosh hero. "Is it warm out?"

"I never talk about weather," replied Manager McGraw. "Anybody can talk about weather. I came here to talk to you about a baseball proposition. Do you care to embrace it?"

"After I have heard what it is," said Harold Hangover, relaxing for a moment into the diction of dear old Oshkosh. "I can't talk no business, though, until I have took this bath and went through with my exercises."

Manager McGraw took the hint so delicately conveyed to him by the great Oshkosh pitcher, and retired to the other room, where he read a magazine baseball story and indulged in a quiet little snicker.

"Now, manager," said our hero, as he appeared in his bathrobe, "now can't we got this interview over? You see I have just had my bath, and I have two appointments down in the Wall Street district. Can't you see that I have just had my bath?"

Manager McGraw smiled tolerantly.

"My dear Harold," he remarked, "you must think that taking a bath is something new under the sun. You forget that I have been a professional baseball player for about twenty years, and that during that time I have probably witnessed many a shower bath. Now and then, during that period, I had a quaint notion that I, too, might bathe, and on more than one occasion I carried out the plan.

"However, I am not here to discuss baths or bathtubs," continued McGraw. "I have come to ask you a peculiar question. I want you to go in every other day, and I want you to give me your word of honor that you will lose every game you pitch. I have a reason for making this extraordinary request."

"Why pick me out to be a goat?" asked the great Oshkosh pitcher. "Why not let Tesreau or one of the other youngsters go in and lose the games? And why do you want to lose them games anyhow?" demanded the famous inventor of the "sneeze" ball. "I know you are on the level yourself, and I always thought that all professional baseball was honest. Why do you want me to pitch losing games?"

For a moment the Napoleon-like brow of John J. McGraw was furrowed with thought.

"Harold," he finally said, "I am he last man in the world that would deliberately do anything to sully the fair name of the game to which I owe so much. But the facts in the case are these: We are winning so many games that the race in the National League is becoming a joke. Whether it is just plain luck or whether it is due to my—ahem—genius, I hesitate to state. All I know is that we have got to lose a few games, or the National League will go to rack and ruin. Picture the possibility of such an event, Harold Hangover.

"Think of the far reaching results! The Cincinnati magnate, poor old Garry Hermann, who has spent his all in the modest little baseball park he idolizes, would become a pauper, dependent on the newspaper men of his bailiwick. Charles Ebbetts would starve. His brother would starve. Bill Dahlen would starve. Think of it, Harold! Think of old Bill Dahlen, my pal in many a National League campaign, starving!" McGraw began to cry softly.

"Don't take it so hard, skipper," said Harold Hangover, soothingly. "To show you that I am a keen friend of yours, I am going to do what you ask. Every time I pitch I will lose. This is a terrible sacrifice, but I am going to do it for you!"

(This will be continued next Sunday.)

HOW THINGS CAME ABOUT--- No. 11. MANICURING.

THERE was a time when ladies' finger nails did not look like a peach blow beneath a ruby light, when there were no crescent moons shining opalescent at the base of the nails, when the edges were not tapered and polished as though shaped by a skilled lapidary. There was a time—

'Enough of that!

This time was long ago, before the days of allmony or Renotis or decrees nisi—but in the days when women remained wives just as long as their husbands cared to have them hanging around.

But during the reign of King Longbeard, the Swift, a little incident happened that led to the gentle and otherwise art of manicuring.

King Longbeard had as fine an assortment of wives as fell to the lot of the ancient semi-barbaric rulers. He was proud of them, excepting such times as he was afraid of them. This was because, at times, they didn't approve of him. Whenever he would bring home a new wife the others would get so peeved they would form a sort of flying wedge and rush him, clawing at him with their unmanicured nails.

Now in those days the ladies used to allow their nails to grow any old length. They knew nothing of trimming and polishing them. The result was that after one of these episodes, the King would come forth with his face, neck and arms looking like the working plan for the manufacture of wire mosquito netting.

He would have so many scratches that it would require the work of an expert accountant to enumerate them. This became rather wearisome. King Longbeard didn't want to put away his wives, for he had quite a hobby that way and was rather proud of his collection. Neither did he care to retire to his private bungalow every little while until his countenance healed sufficiently for his court followers to recognize him.

One day he secured a brand new wife and was bringing her home to add to his collection when it occurred to him that he was in for a fine scratching up.

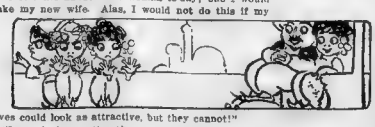
"Have you any brains?" he asked the maiden.

"Do I look like a suffragette?" inquired the girl, angrily, whereupon the King quieted her and explained his troubles.

"Sire," said the girl, "I am in love with a simple goat herder but must give him up at your command. If I will tell you how to prevent being scratched in the future will you give me up to my own love?"

"I will," replied the King, whereupon the maiden gave the King certain instructions and went her way rejoicing. The King hurried home and that evening he remarked, in a careless manner:

"I saw the handsomest woman to-day; one I would make my new wife. Alas, I would not do this if my wives could look as attractive, but they cannot!"



"I can look as attractive as any woman!" angrily exclaimed the head wife. "Pray what was her wonderful charm?"

At this the King explained that this woman had her finger nails trimmed and polished until her hands looked like veritable lotus buds.

"Get her to show us how!" begged the head wife, and so the King, delighted, went next day to the maiden and had her come to the palace, where she trimmed and polished the nails of all his wives. She trimmed them so short they could not scratch.

"It is an improvement," all his wives declared, "and it might also improve you, your majesty!" Seeing no way out of it, the King had this maiden manicure him. He took such delight in this that the first wife he thereafter discarded promptly set up a manicure shop with such great success that all the nobles of the realm came to have their nails polished.

Other maidens were prompt to see the advantage of this and manicuring became established.

Thus did King Longbeard, the Swift, escape the clawlike finger nails of his wives and at the same time establish a custom that flourishes to this day, to the great delight of all the women and many an almost-brained man who cannot think of any other way to get heart throbs except to let a golden-haired manicure girl hold his pudgy hand.

WARFIELD—Say, I got something for you.

NIBLO—Well, what is it?

WARFIELD—A bargain; fine, vonderful!

NIBLO—Oh, I don't want a hat.

NIBLO—Well, let me see; have you a looking glass?

WARFIELD—Vat for you vant a looking glass? Vant to see how you look? Nuh, nuh. Don't you look. Don't touch it.

NIBLO—Ah, pardon me; I dropped it.

WARFIELD—Sure, you see it's a fall hat.

NIBLO—Say, you must thing I'm stuck on that hat.

WARFIELD—Sure you are, if you buy it. Try this one.

NIBLO—No, I tell you I don't want a hat.

WARFIELD—Just put it on. Oh, you look fine. Your mother vouldn't know you. You look just like a gentleman; could hardly tell der difference. Dot's right—feel the brim. You see, it's a Spring hat. Look inside—see vere it vas made; Third avenue, only two blocks from Fifth avenue.

NIBLO—Well, how much?

WARFIELD—Dree dollars.

NIBLO—What!

WARFIELD—Sixty cents! Say, I know you anyhow. You'de an old friend of Solly Rosenstein. Uh-huh. Solly's living here now. His son godt married; married Rosie Pokufski

NIBLO—Which one is Rosie?

WARFIELD—You know; der big, tall vun, vid red hairs. Chure!

NIBLO—Oh, I thought she was engaged to a butcher.

WARFIELD—She vas, but he godt a bigger bargain. So she married Rosenstein. Nice boy, Solly. I vas by der wedding. We singed and d nced until way after 2 o'clock. Den der janitor came up and vanted us it to stop; he vas a big Irish fighter. Solly tried to lick him. You should see the Irishman's physic—great big. But he couldn't fight. Rosenstein, vid his two brudders and his fadder-in-law, nearly beat 'im up.

NIBLO—By the way, what's Solly doing now?

WARFIELD—Oh, he's got a fine position in der court -$16 a week. He's a—you know—tells what people say ven dey can't talk—a-a-turpentine.

NIBLO—I guess you mean an interpreter.

WARFIELD—Ya, dot's right, a terpinter.

NIBLO—Well, how about Becky?

WARFIELD—Becky? Huh-ha. She's a Spanish dancer now. You know, tick-tock, tick-tock. Vot is it? Cascarets?

NIBLO—Castanets.

WARFIELD—Yeh, dot's vot I mean. And Abey, you remember Abey; he got in drouble at his house. It vas his birthday; I mean he vas born—he wasn't born de odder day—but you know, dey celebrated anyhow. His fadder gafe him $5.

NIBLO—For a present.

WARFIELD—Nuh, nuh; chust to play vid-a liddle while. Der foolish boy swallowed it—what do you tink of dat, and der last I heard dey had only got dree dollars and sixgtay cendts back yet.

NIBLO—That doesn't speak very well for Abey's brilliancy, does it?

WARFIELD—Huh, not much. And, you know, he's awful dumb in school. De odder day der teacher asked him how much is two and two. Abey said fife. Der teacher asked him ten times and he said fife affery time, so she sent him out in der hall to tink it ofer. Meyer came along and Abey asked him how much is two and two. Meyer said four. Abey shook his head and said, "Don't go in dere; I chust offered her fife and she vouldn't take it."

NIBLO—How are things at your lodge now?

WARFIELD—Say, dot reminds me. You're a friend of Cohen's, ain't it? Siggy Cohen? Yes, well, I chust left his house, and he's got a fight vid his vife ofer dere. You see Siggy belonge to my lodge, and last month he had it a party and hired out a actor to make a theayter. After supper der actor commenced. He picked up from the table a chicken bone and said, "Vot great general does it remind you about him?" Nobody knowed it. Den he broke it in half and said General Bonaparte. Huh-huh-ha. I nearly busted my life outt. Cohen laughed too, and ran home to his vife and shook her and voke her up, and said I vant to show you a trick. It'll make you laugh a lot. Rachel told him to shut up and go to sleep, but Siggy existed on doing der trick. So he took a chicken bone outt of his pocket and held it up and said, "Rachel, who is it?" She said, "Vot's matter, you crazy?" Den Siggy broke der bone in two and said, "Napoleon." Rachel hasn't yet made him forgiven.

NIBLO—Well, I feel sorry for Rachel. But tell me, is it true that you were chased by a dog yesterday?

WARFIELD—I should say it is true, and I nearly had der life frightened outt of me. I vas caming down der street and a big dog commenced it to holler at me. I didn't do him noddings at all.

NIBLO—You mean he was barking at you.

WARFIELD—Yes, yes, and say, belief it, I was frightened.

NIBLO—But don't you know a barking dog never bites?

WARFIELD—Yes, I know it and you know it, but he don't know it.

NIBLO—It was sort of a miracle that you got safely away then, wasn't it?

WARFIELD—Miracle? Vot's a miracle?

NIBLO—You don't know what a miracle is? Well, now, supposing you were sitting at a window and fell out; then got up and walked away. What would that be?

WARFIELD—Huh—good luck.

NIBLO—No, no. Now listen, for the second time. Suppose you were sting by the open window enjoying the cool breezes, reading a paper, and you looked out. You leaned too far, lost your balance, and foll clear down to the hard pavement below. But instead of being dashed to death, you were not hurt, but stood right up and walked on. Now what do you think that would be?

WARFIELD—I vouldn't do it.

NIBLO—Oh, now you're not thinking about the question. Listen, for the third and last time. The situation is briefly this: You are sitting at a window; you fall out; you get up and walk away; what is it?

WARFIELD—Thats a habit.

Tribes of North America ==The Mollycoddles

By Lewis Allen

"CLARENCE CHARLOHMDY, come right in here to mamma. Don't ever let me hear you say such an awful word as 'Darn!' again, and never, never, never play with that Willie Jones. He doesn't keep his hands clean!"

There you are! Take that!

You know all about Clarence Charlohmdy now. You know about his straw colored hair, in long ringlets, and about his sailor hat tied under his chin with a robin's egg blue satin ribbon. You know all about his weak little chin and squirrel teeth and his spindle legs. In fact, you know just how Clarence is going to be tenderly reared. By the time he is fifteen years old his mother will allow him to go down to the Y. M. C. A. and sit up as late as half past eight, playing croquole or reading the Band of Hope Herald.

By the time little Clarence is eighteen he will be wearing glasses and playing melodies on the zither. And he will be a full-fledged "mollycoddle."

Clarence will then get real sporty and go to baseball games and when a man on the home team bunts the subere right into the pitcher's hands and is tossed out at first before he has time to drop his bat Clarence will scream in a rich, high falsetto, "Goodness gracious, darnitall, why didn't he run fas er?"

And what fun the fellows will have with him. They will put glue in his hat and drop suspicious eggs in his pockets and drop chocolate creams down his 3½ inch collar and then slam him familiarly on the shoulders until the aforesaid chocolate cream is ruined beyond repair.

At the dances all the boys will make fun of him because of the exquisite perfume on the lace handkerchief he carries in his sleeve, and some big brute of a fellow will trip him up and—well, you know how it is yourself. You just cannot help having a lot of sport with these namby pamby, gushy-mushy, milk soppy "mollycoddles."

And while the rest of you are having sport at baseball and tennis and football, or while you are working in offices and shops and getting married and hustling around to support a family, little Clarence Charlohmdy will still be tottering up and down the main street of your village, wearing a carnation in his buttonhole and taking Bertha M. Stush's books out of the library.

Most of the girls will openly snicker at him, although glad enough to dance with him. The men he went to school with will look pityingly at him and make all sorts of rude remarks in his hearing to embarrass him.

And about this time pretty Clarence will meet some charming but sorrowing widow at a Summer resort. He will read poetry to her and talk endearing and consoling words to her and, presto!—almost before Clarence himself realizes it, the widow's heart has been caught on the rebound and the marriage takes place.

Then Clarence brings his bride home to our village and it turns out that she was left a large bunch of millions by a man who was not narrow minded enough to stipulate that she lose it if she marry again. And Clarence and his bride begin to build a home there that looks like a castle, and they have a large assortment of automobiles and Clarence buys up a lot of real estate and everyone in town begins to kow-tow to the lucre. Clarence Charlohmdy.

And the men folks who used to throw mud at Clarence when they were lads and soak him with eggs when they were youths, and made coarse remarks about him when they were grown up, begin to worry and wonder, now that he has bought up all the loose real estate and mortgages, if he will foreclose on them. And they begin to bow to him and smile at him, and when they call to sort of get their bearings Clarence stands in the reception hall, looks squarely out in their faces and says to his butler, "James, tell that—person to call on me again if he has anything to say, or to write his message and mail it. This is my dinner hour and I cannot be bothered with trifling details."

That's one sort of "mollycoddle." Then there is another sort. There's really more fun in him.

The boys pull his curls and watch him run home and hide behind his mamma's apron. They make all sorts of fun of him, for there is something almost irresistible about these "mollycoddles" that makes one want to be continually abusing them. They are a rather pitiful tribe, but North America has all sorts of tribes and must put up with them.

When Bill hit him in the eye he wasn't expecting it. Bill came up behind him, jumped in front of him and hit him. It was such fun. But something about the blow and the manner sort of made little red spots dance, picked himself up he took a large, round and mud-stained cobble stone with him. He knew he was such a sissy he couldn't throw it straight, so he just jumped at Bill and mashed him right in the face.

When the doctors got through with Bill they told his parents that while his nose would never be straight again, he would have some front teeth in time, as those he had swallowed were only his first ones.

And then poor little Mollycoddle Montmorency went home and cut off his curls and told his mother to "shut up," and went out looking for some of Bill Smithers' pals. But, somehow or other, every time Montmorency appeared they had business down another street or around a corner.

After Bill got the bandages off his face so he could be recognized he came out-doors again and he and "Monty," as everyone calls Montmorency, became the greatest of chums.

A mollycoddle is a very ladylike chap, but beware of him, because he may grab up a cobblestone almost any time and smash you with it, or he may elope with your rich sweetheart.

There's something about a Mollycoddle that fascinates a great many women, but most women, to give them due credit, prefer a poodle.

Vacation Days

Different Ways of Seeking Summer Recreation.

NOW that Summer has come this way, the subject of vacations assumes greater importance.

Vacations may be spent—

a. In the mountains.

b On the seashore.

c. By a lake.

All of these ways have disadvantages.

In the mountains walking is more difficult than on the level.

At the seashore it is damper than in the desert and there are also shore dinners to be feared.

By a lake there is a chance of failing in and getting wet.

On the other hand, the advantages are that in the mountains you can roll down hill to the railroad if you have lost your return ticket.

At the seashore you may find a shell once in a while, and you can start a lime factory.

By a lake there is usually plenty of more or less fresh water.

With these facts in mind a decision should be easily reached.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

It is easy to string beans?

There are no conies on Coney Island, and anyway it isn't an island?

The Bronx is named after a cocktail?

Mars is 4,798,321 miles from the Earth, and nobody cares whether they give transfers on the line or not.

Asparagus is short for asparagustus?

One fly will hatch 879,327,145 young flies in a week if not swatted severely?

If you multiply $5 by 5 you will get nothing—unless you get out and hustle for it?

Cherries are now being gathered—by robins.

White leghorns are excellent chickens if you dont' want to eat them and don't care for eggs.

To tell if a rose bush is growing well, pull it up by the roots. If it comes up easily it probably wasn't growing well or the roots would have held better.

If you have a hen that clucks, you can easily cure her of it by teaching her to whistle instead.

This is the season for swatting flies. Do not try to swat them while they are on a window pane unless you have a friend who is a glazier.

THE MAN FROM ARCHANGEL—By A. Conan Doyle

ON the fourth day of March, in the year 1867, I, being at that time in my five-and-twentieth year, I wrote down the following words in my notebook—the result of much mental perturbation and conflict:

"The solar system, amidst a countless number of other systems as large as itself, rolls ever silently through space in the direction of the constellation of Hercules. The great spheres of which it is composed spin and spin through the eternal void ceaselessly and noiselessly. Of these one of the smallest, and most insignificant is that conglomeration of solid and of liquid particles which we have named the earth. It whirls onward now as it has done before my birth, and will do after my death—a revolving mystery, coming none know whence, and going none know whither. Upon the outer crest of this moving mass crawl many mites, of whom I, John McVittie, am one, helpless, impotent, being dragged aimlessly through space. Yet such is the state of things amongst us that the little energy and glimmering of reason which I possess is entirely taken up with the labors which are necessary in order to procure certain metallic disks wherewith I may purchase the chemical elements necessary to build up my ever-wasting tissues, and keep a roof over me to shelter me from the inclemency of the weather. I thus have no thought to expend upon the vital questions which surround me on every side. Yet, miserable entity as I am, I can still at times feel some degree of happiness, and am even—save the mark!—puffed up occasionally with a sense of my own importance."

These words, as I have said, I wrote down in my notebook, and they reflected accurately the thoughts which I found rooted far down in my soul, ever present and unaffected by the passing emotions of the hour. At last, however, came a time when my uncle, McVittie of Glencairn died—the same who was at one time chairman of committees of the House of Commons. He divided his great wealth among his many nephews, and I found myself with sufficient to provide ample for my wants during the remainder of my life, and became at the same time owner of a bleak tract of land upon the coast of Caithness, which I think the old man must have bestowed upon me in derision, for it was sandy and valueless, and he had ever a grim sense of humor. Up to this time I had been an attorney in a midland town in England. Now I saw that I could put my thoughts into effect, and, leaving all petty and sordid aims, could elevate my mind by the study of the secrets of nature. My departure from my English home was somewhat accelerated by the fact that I had nearly slain a man in a quarrel, for my temper was fiery, and I was apt to forget my own strength when enraged. There was no legal action taken in the matter, but the papers yelped at me, and folk looked askance when I met them. It ended by my cursing them and their vile, smoke-polluted town, and hurrying to my Northern possession, where I might at last find peace and an opportunity for solitary study and contemplation. I borrowed from my capital before I went, and so was able to take with me a choice collection of the most modern philosophical instruments and books, together with chemicals and such other things as I might need in my retirement.

The land which I had inherited was a narrow strip, consisting mostly of sand, and extending for rather over two miles round the coast of Mansie Bay, in Caithness. Upon this strip there had been a rambling, grey-stone building—when erected or wherefore none could tell me—and this I had repaired, so that it made a dwelling quite good enough for one of my simple tastes. One room was my laboratory, another my sitting-room, and in a third, just under the sloping roof, I slung the hammock in which I always slept. There were three other rooms, but I left them vacant, except one which was given over to the old crone who kept house for me. Save the Youngs and the McLeods, who were fisher-folk living round at the other side of Fergus Ness, there were no other people for many miles in each direction.

What companion is there like the great restless, throbbing sea? What human mood is there which does not match and sympathize with? There are none so gay that they may feel gayer when they listen to its merry turmoil, and see the long green surges racing in, with the glint of the sunbeams in their sparkling crests. But when the grey waves toss their heads in anger, and the wind screams above them, goading them on to madder and more tumultuous efforts, then the darkest-minded of men feels that there is a melancholy principle in Nature which is as gloomy as his own thoughts. When it was calm in the Bay of Mansie the surface would be as clear and bright as a sheet of silver, broken only at one spot some little way from the shore, where a long black line projected out of the water looking like the jagged back of some sleeping monster. This was the top of the dangerous ridge of rocks known to the fishermen as the "ragged reef o' Mansie." When the wind blew from the East the waves would break upon it like thunder, and the spray would be tossed far over my house and up to the hills behind. The bay itself was a bold and noble one, but too much exposed to the northern and eastern gales, and too much dreaded for its reef, to be much used by mariners. There was something of romance about this lonely spot. I have lain in my boat upon a calm day, and peering over the edge I have seen far down the flickering, ghostly forms of great fish—fish, as it seemed to me, such as naturalist never knew, and which my imagination transformed into the genii of that desolate bay. Once, as I stood by the brink of the waters upon a quiet night, a great cry, as of a woman in hopeless grief, rose from the bosom of the deep and swelled out upon the still air, now sinking and now rising, for a space of thirty seconds. This I heard with my own ears.

Three rough days in June had been succeeded by one calm and peaceful one. There was not a breath of air that evening. The sun sank down in the West behind a line of purple clouds, and scarlet streaks. Along the beach the pools left by the tide showed up like gouts of blood against the yellow sand, as if some wounded giant had toilfully passed that way, and had left these red traces of his grievous hurt behind him. As the darkness closed in, certain ragged clouds which had lain low on the eastern horizon coalesced and formed a great irregular cumulus. The glass was still low, and I knew that there was mischief brewing. About 9 o'clock a dull, moaning sound came up from the sea, as from a creature who, much harassed, learns that the hour of suffering has come round again. At 10 a sharp breeze sprang up from the eastward. At 11 it had increased to a gale, and by midnight the most furious storm was raging which I ever remember upon that weather-beaten coast.

As I went to bed the shingle and seaweed were pattering up against my attic window, and the wind was screaming as though every gust were a lost soul. By that time the sounds of the tempest had become a lullaby to me. I knew that the gray walls of the old house would buffet it out, and for what occurred in the world outside I had small concern. Old Madge was usually as callous to such things as I was myself. It was a surprise to me when, about 3 in the morning, I was awakened by excited cries in the wheezy voice of my housekeeper. I sprang out of my hammock and roughly demanded of her what was the matter.

"Eh, maister, maister!" she screamed in her hateful dialect. "Come doun, mun; come doun! There's a muckle ship gaun ashore on the reef, and the puir folks are a' yammerin' and ca'in' for help—and I doobt they'll a' be droonded. Oh, Maister McVittie, come doun!"

"Hold your tongue, you hag!" I shouted back in a passion. "What is it to you whether they are drowned or not? Get back to your bed and leave me alone." I turned in again and drew the blankets over me. "Those men out there," I said to myself, "have already gone through half the horrors of death. If they be saved they will but have to go through the same once more in the space of a few brief years. It is best, therefore, that they should pass away now, since they have suffered that anticipation which is more than the pain of dissolution." With this thought in my mind I endeavored to compose myself to sleep once more, for that philosophy which had taught me to consider death as a small and trivial incident in man's eternal and ever-changing career had also broken me of much curiosity concerning worldly matters. On this occasion I found, however, that the old leaven still fermented strongly in my soul. I tossed from side to side for some minutes endeavoring to beat down the impulses of the moment by the rules of conduct which I had framed during months of thought. Then I heard a dull roar amid the wild shriek of the gale, and I knew that it was the sound of a signal gun. Driven by an uncontrollable impulse, I rose, dressed, and, having lit my pipe, walked out on to the beach.

It was pitch dark when I came outside, and the wind blew with such violence that I had to put my shoulder against it and push my way along the shingle. My face pringled and smarted with the sting of the gravel which was blown against it, and the red ashes of my pipe streamed away behind me, dancing frantically through the darkness. I went down to where the great waves were thundering in, and shading my eyes with my hands to keep off the salt spray, I peered out to sea. I could distinguish nothing, and yet it seemed to me that shouts and great inarticulate cries were borne to me by the blasts.

Suddenly as I gazed I made out the glint of a light, and then the whole bay and the beach were lit up in a moment by a vivid blue glare. They were burning a colored signal light on board of the vessel.

Clinging to the weather shrouds I could distinctly see some ten or twelve frightened seamen, who, when their light revealed my presence, turned their white faces toward me and waved their hands imploringly. I felt my gorge rise against these poor cowering worms. Why should they presume to shirk the narrow pathway along which all that is great and noble among mankind has travelled?

There was one there who interested me more than they. He was a tall man, who stood apart from the others, balancing himself upon the swaying wreck as though he disdained to cling to rope or bulwark. His hands were clasped behind his back and his head was sunk upon his breast, but even in that despondent attitude there was a litheness and decision in his pose and in every motion which marked him as a man little likely to yield to despair. Indeed, I could see by his occasional rapid glances up and down and all around him that he was weighing every chance of safety, but though he often gazed across the raging surf to where he could see my dark figure upon the beach, his self-respect or some other reason forbade him from imploring my help in any way. He stood, dark, silent, and inscrutable, looking down on the black sea, and waiting for whatever fortune Fate might send him.

It seemed to me that that problem would very soon be settled. As I looked, an enormous billow, topping all the others, and coming after them, like a driver following a flock, swept over the vessel. Her foremast snapped short off, and the men who clung to the shrouds were brushed away like a swarm of flies. With a rending, riving sound the ship began to split in two where the sharp back of the Mansie Reef was sawing into her keel. The solitary man upon the forecastle ran rapidly across the deck and seized hold of a white bundle which I had already observed, but failed to make out.

As he lifted it up the light fell upon it, and I saw that the object was a woman, with a spar lashed across her body, and under her arms in such a way that her head should always rise above water. He bore her tenderly to the side and seemed to speak for a minute or so to her, as though explaining the impossibility of remaining upon the ship. Her answer was a singular one. I saw her deliberately raise her hand and strike him across the face with it. He appeared to be silenced for a moment or so by this, but he addressed her again, directing her, as far as I could gather from his motions, how she should behave when in the water. She shrank away from him, but he caught her in his arms. He stooped over her for a moment and seemed to press his lips against her forehead. Then a great wave came welling up against the side of the breaking vessel, and leaning over, he placed her upon the summit of it gently as a child might be committed to its cradle. I saw her white dress flickering among the foam on the crest of the dark billow, and then the light sank gradually lower, and the riven ship and its lonely occupant were hidden from my eyes.

As I watched those things my manhood overcame my philosophy and I felt a frantic impulse to be up and doing. I threw my cynicism to one side as a garment which I might don again at leisure, and I rushed wildly to my boat and my sculls. She was a leaky tub, but what then? Was I, who had cast many a wistful, doubtful glance at my opium bottle, to begin now to weigh chances and to cavil at danger? I dragged her down to the sea with the strength of a maniac and sprang in. For a moment or two it was a question whether she could live among the boiling surge, but a dozen frantic strokes took me through it, half full of water, but still afloat. I was out on the unbroken waves now, at one time climbing up the broad black breast of one, then sinking down, down on the other side, until looking up I could see the gleam of the foam all around me against the dark heavens. Far behind me I could hear the wild wailings of old Madge, who, seeing me start, thought no doubt that my madness had come to a climax. As I rowed I peered over my shoulder, until at last on the belly of a great wave which was sweeping toward me I distinguished the vague outline of the woman. Stooping over I seized her as she swept by me, and with an effort lifted her, all sodden with water, into the boat. There was no need to row back, for the next billow carried us in and threw us upon the beach. I dragged the boat out of danger and then lifting up the woman, I carried her to the house, followed by my housekeeper, loud with congratulation and praise.

The morning after the gale was peaceful and sunny. As I walked along the long sweep of sand I could hear the panting of the sea. It was a heaving and swirling about the reef, but along the shore it rippled in gently enough. There was no sign of the schooner, nor was there any wreckage upon the beach, which did not surprise me, as I knew there was a great undertow in those waters. A couple of broad-winged gulls were hovering and skimming over the scene of the shipwreck, as though many strange things were visible to them beneath the waves. At times I could hear their raucous voices as they spoke to one another of what they saw.

When I came back from my walk the woman was waiting at the door for me. I began to wish when I saw her that I had never saved her, for here was an end of my privacy.

She was very young—at the most nineteen, with a pale, somewhat refined face, yellow hair, merry blue eyes and shining teeth. Her beauty was of an ethereal type. She looked so white and light and fragile that she might have been the spirit of that storm foam from out of which I plucked her. She had wreathed some of Madge's garments around her in a way which was quaint and not unbecoming. As I strode heavily up the pathway she put out her hands with a pretty child-like gesture, and ran down toward me, meaning, as I surmise, to thank me for having saved her, but I put her aside with a wave of my hand and passed her. At this she seemed somewhat hurt, and the tears sprang to her eyes, but she followed me into the sitting room and watched me wistfully. "What country do you come from?" I asked her suddenly.

"Stand off," I said. "If you lay a finger on me I shall kill you."

She smiled when I spoke, but shook her head.

"Francais?" I asked. "Deutsch?" "Espagnol?"—each time she shook her head, and then she rippled off into a long statement in some tongue of which I could not understand one word.

After breakfast was over, however, I got a clew to her nationality. Passing along the beach once more, I saw that in a cleft of the ridge a piece of wood had been jammed. I rowed out to it in my boat, and brought it ashore. It was part of the sternpost of a boat, and on it, or rather on the piece of wood attached to it, was the word "Archangel," painted in strange, quaint lettering. "So," I thought, as I paddled slowly back, "this pale damsel is a Russian. A fit subject for the White Czar, and a proper dweller on the shores of the White Sea!" It seemed to me strange that one of her apparent refinement should perform so long a journey in so frail a craft. When I came back into the house, I pronounced the word "Archangel" several times in different intonations, but she did not appear to recognize it.

I shut myself up in the laboratory all the morning, continuing a research which I was making upon the nature of the allotropic forms of carbon and of sulphur. When I came out at mid-day for some food she was sitting by the table with a needle and thread, mending some rents in her clothes, which were now dry. I resented her continued presence, but I could not turn her out on the beach to shift for herself. Presently she presented a new phase of her character. Pointing to herself and then to the scene of the shipwreck, she held up one finger, by which I understood her to be asking whether she was the only one saved. I nodded my head to indicate that she was.

On this she sprang out of the chair with a cry of great joy, and holding the garment which she was mending over her head, and swaying it from side to side with the motion of her body, she danced as lightly as a feather all around the room and then out through the open door into the sunshine. As she whirled round she sang in a plaintive shrill voice some uncouth barbarous chant, expressive of exultation. I called out to her: "Co[illegible] you young fiend, come in and be [illegible] but she went on with her dance, [illegible] she suddenly ran toward me, and, [illegible]ing my hand before I could pluck it away, she kissed it. While we were at dinner she spied [illegible] and taking it up she wrote the two words: "Sophie Ramusine" upon a piece of paper, and then pointed to herself as a sign that that was her name. She handed the pencil to me, evidently expecting that I would be equally communicative, [illegible] put it in my pocket as a sign that I wished to hold no intercourse with her.

I soon found that there were fresh troubles in store for me. There is no place safe from the swarming, restless race of which I am a member. In the evening, when the sun was dipping down behind the hills, casting them into dark shadow, but gilding the sands and casting a great glory over the sea, I went, as is my custom, for a stroll along the beach. Sometimes on these occasions I took my book with me. I did so on this night, and stretching myself upon a sand dune I composed myself to read. As I lay there I suddenly became aware of a shadow which interposed itself between the sun and myself. Looking round, I saw, to my great surprise, a very tall, powerful man, who was standing a few yards off, and who, instead of looking at me, was ignoring my existence completely, and was gazing over my head with a stern set face at the bay and the black line of the Mansie reef. His complexion was dark, with black hair, and short, curling beard, a hawklike nose, and golden earrings in his ears—the general effect being wild and somewhat noble. He wore a faded velveteen jacket, a red flannel shirt and high sea boots, coming half way up his thighs. I recognised him at a glance as being the same man who had been left on the wreck the night before.

"Hullo!" I said, in an aggrieved voice. "You got ashore all right, then?"

"Yes," he answered, in good English. "It was no doing of mine. The waves threw me up. I wish to God I had been allowed to drown!" There was a slight foreign lisp in his accent which was rather pleasing. "Two good fishermen who live round yonder point pulled me out, and cared for me; yet I could not honestly thank them for it."

"Ho! ho!" thought I, "here is a man of my own kidney. Why do you wish to be drowned?" I asked.

"Because," he cried, throwing out his long arms with a passionate, despairing gesture, "there—there in that blue smiling bay, lies my soul, my treasure—everything that I loved and lived for."

"Well, well," I said. "People are ruined every day, but there's no use making a fuss about it. Let me inform you that this ground on which you walk is my ground, and that the sooner you take yourself off it the better pleased I shall be. One of you is quite trouble enough."

"One of us?" he gasped.

"Yes—if you could take her off with you I should be still more grateful."

He gazed at me for a moment as if hardly able to realize what I said, and then with a wild cry ran away from me with prodigious speed and raced along the sands toward my house. Never before or since have I seen a human being run so fast. I followed as rapidly as I could, furious at this threatened invasion, but long before I reached the house he had disappeared through the open door. I heard a great scream from the inside, and as I came nearer the sound of a man's bass voice speaking rapidly and loudly. When I looked in, the girl, Sophie Ramusine, was crouching in a corner, cowering away, with fear and loathing expressed on her averted face, and in every line of her shrinking form. The other, with his dark eyes flashing, and his outstretched hands quivering with emotion, was pouring forth a torrent of passionate, pleading words. He made a step forward to her as I entered, but she writhed still farther away, and uttered a sharp cry like that of a rabbit when the weasel has him by the throat.

"Here!" I said, pulling him back from her. "This is a pretty to-do. What do you mean? Do you think this is a wayside inn or place of public accommodation?"

"Oh, sir," he said, "excuse me. This woman is my wife, and I feared that she was drowned. You have brought me back to life."

"Who are you?" I asked roughly.

"I am a man from Archangel," he said simply, "a Russian man."

"What is your name?"

"Ourganeff."

"Ourganeff!—and here is Sophie Ramusine. She is no wife of yours. She has no ring."

"We are man and wife in the sight of Heaven," he said solemnly, looking upward. "We are bound by higher laws than those of earth." As he spoke the girl slipped behind me and caught me by the other hand, pressing it as though beseeching my protection. "Give me up my wife, sir," he went on. "Let me take her away from here."

"Look here, you—whatever your name is," I said sternly, "I don't want this wench here. I wish I had never seen her. If she died it would be no grief to me. But as to handing her over to you, when it is clear she fears and hates you, I won't do it. So now just clear your great body out of this, and leave me to my books. I hope I may never look upon your face again."

"You won't give her up to me?" he said hoarsely.

"I'll see you cursed first," I answered.

All my tigerish blood flushed up in a moment. I picked up a billet of wood from beside the fireplace. "Go," I said, in a low voice; "go quick, or I may do you an injury." He looked at me irresolutely for a moment, and then he left the house. He came back again in a moment, however, and stood in the doorway looking in at us.

"Have a heed what you do," he said. "The woman is mine, and I shall have her. When it comes to blows, a Russian is as good a man as a Scotchman."

"We shall see that," I cried, springing forward, but he was already gone, and I could see his tall form moving away through the gathering darkness.

For a month or more after this things went smoothly with us. I never spoke to the Russian girl, nor did she ever address me. Sometimes when I was at work in my laboratory she would slip inside the door and sit silently there watching me with her great eyes. At first this intrusion annoyed me, but by degrees, finding that she made no attempt to distract my attention, I suffered her to remain. Encouraged by this concession, she gradually came to move the stool on which she sat nearer and nearer to my table, until, after gaining a little every day during some weeks, she at last worked herself beside me whenever I worked. In this position she used, still without ever obtruding her presence in any way, to make herself very useful by holding my pens, test tubes, or bottles, and handing me whatever I wanted, with never-failing sagacity.

She never went more than a few yards from the house, and indeed never put her foot over the threshold without looking carefully out of each window in order to be sure that there was nobody about. By this I knew that she suspected that her fellow countryman was still in the neighborhood, and feared that he might attempt to carry her off. She did something else which was significant. I had an old revolver with some cartridges, which had been thrown away among the rubbish. She found this one day, and at once proceeded to clean it and oil it. She hung it up near the [illegible], with the cartridges in a little bag [illegible] it, and whenever I went for a walk she would take it down and insist upon my carrying it with me. In my absence she would always bolt the door. Apart from her apprehension she seemed fairly happy, busying herself in helping Madge when she was not attending upon me. She was wonderfully nimble fingered and natty in all domestic duties.

It was not long before I discovered that her suspicions were well founded, and that this man from Archangel was still lurking in the vicinity. Being restless one night I rose and peered out of the window. The weather was somewhat cloudy, and I could barely make out the line of the sea, and the loom of my boat upon the beach. As I gazed, however, and my eyes became accustomed to the obscurity, I became aware that there was some other dark blur upon the sands, and that in front of my very door, where certainly there had been nothing of the sort the preceding night. As I stood at my diamond paned lattice still peering and peeping to make out what this might be, a great bank of clouds rolled slowly away from the face of the moon, and a flood of cold, clear light was poured down upon the silent bay and the long sweep of its deserted shores. Then I saw what this was which haunted my doorstep. It was he, the Russian. He squatted there like a gigantic toad, with his legs doubled under him in strange Mongolian fashion, and his eyes fixed apparently upon the window of the room in which the young girl and the housekeeper slept. The light fell upon his upturned face, and I saw once more the hawklike grace of his countenance, with the single deeply indented line of care upon his brow and the protruding beard which marks the passionate nature. My first impulse was to shoot him as a trespasser, but, as I gazed, my resentment changed into pity and contempt.

"Poor fool," I said to myself, "is it then possible that you, whom I have seen looking open-eyed at present death, should have your whole thoughts and ambition centred upon this wretched slip of a girl—a girl, too, who flies from you and hates you. Most women would love you—were it but for that dark face and great handsome body of yours—and yet you must needs hanker after the one in a thousand who will have no traffic with you."

As I returned to my bed I chuckled much to myself over this thought. I knew that my bars were strong and my bolts thick. It mattered little to me whether this strange man spent his night at my door or a hundred leagues off, so long as he was gone by the morning. As I expected, when I rose and went out there was no sign of him, nor had he left any trace of his midnight vigil.

It was not long, however, before I saw him again. I had been out for a row one morning, for my head was aching, partly from prolonged stooping, and partly from the effects of a noxious drug which I had inhaled during the night before. I pulled along the coast some miles, and then, feeling thirsty, I landed at a place where I knew that a fresh water stream trickled down into the sea. This rivulet passed through my land, but the mouth of it where I found myself that day, was beyond my boundary line. I felt somewhat taken aback when rising from the stream at which I had slaked my thirst I found myself face to face with the Russian. I was as much a trespasser now as he was, and I could see at a glance that he knew it.

"I wish to speak a few words to you," he said gravely.

"Hurry up, then!" I answered, glancing at my watch. "I have no time to listen to chatter."

"And what is your object in keeping me from Sophie?" he asked. "Do you imagine that I would injure her. Why, man, I would give my life freely to save her from the slightest harm. Why do you do this thing?"

"I do it because it is my good pleasure to act so," I answered. "I give no man reasons for my conduct."

"Look here!" he cried, suddenly blazing into fury, and advancing toward me with his shaggy mane bristling and his brown hands clenched. "If I thought you had one dishonest thought toward this girl—if for a moment I had reason to believe that you had any base motive for detaining her—as sure as there is a God in Heaven I should drag the heart out of your bosom with my hands." The very idea seemed to have put the man in a frenzy, for his face was all distorted and his hands opened and shut convulsively. I thought that he was about to spring at my throat.

"Stand off," I said, putting my hand on my pistol. "If you lay a finger on me I shall kill you."

He put one hand into his pocket and for a moment I thought he was about to produce a weapon, too, but instead of that he whipped out a cigarette and lit it, breathing the smoke rapidly into his lungs. No doubt he had found by experience that this was the most effectual way of curbing his passions.

"I told you," he said in a quieter voice, "that my name is Ourganeff—Alexis Ourganeff. I am a Finn by birth, but I have spent my life in every part of the world. I was one who could never be still, nor settle down to a quiet existence. After I came to own my own ship there is hardly a port from Archangel to Australia which I have not entered. I was rough and wild and free, but there was one at home, sir, who was prim and white-handed and soft-tongued, skilful in little fancies and conceits which women love. This youth by his wiles and tricks stole from me the love of the girl whom I had ever marked as my own, and who up to that time had seemed in some sort inclined to return my passion. I had been on a voyage to Hammerfest for ivory, and coming back unexpectedly I learned that my pride and treasure was to be married to this soft-skinned boy, and that the party had actually gone to the church. In such moments, sir, something gives way in my head, and I hardly know what I do. I landed with a boat's crew—all men who had sailed with me for years, and who were as true as steel. We went up to the church. They were standing, she and he, before the priest, but the thing had not been done. I dashed between them and caught her round the waist. My men beat back the frightened bridegroom and the lookers on. We bore her down to the boat and aboard our vessel, and then getting up anchor we sailed away across the White sea until the spires of Archangel sank down behind the horizon.

"She had my cabin, my room, every comfort. I slept among the men in the forecastle. I hoped that in time her aversion to me would wear away and that she would consent to marry me in England or in France. For days we sailed. We saw the North Cape die away behind us, and we skirted the gray Norwegian coast, but still, in spite of every attention, she would not forgive me for tearing her from that pale-faced lover of hers. Then came this cursed storm which shattered both my ship and my hopes, and has deprived me even of the sight of the woman for whom I have risked so much. Perhaps she may learn to love me yet. You, sir," he said, wistfully, "look like one who has seen much of the world. Do you not think that she may come to forget this man and love me?"

"I am tired of your story," I said turning away. "For my part, I think you are a great fool. If you imagine that this love of yours will pass away you had best amuse yourself as best you can until it does. If, on the other hand, it is a fixed thing, you cannot do better than cut your throat, for that is the shortest way out of it. I have no more time to waste on the matter." With this I hurried away and walked down to the boat. I never looked round, but I heard the dull sound of his feet upon the sands as he followed me.

"I have told you the beginning of my story," he said, "and you shall know the end some day. You would do well to let the girl go."

I never answered him, but pushed the boat off. When I had rowed some distance out I looked back and saw his tall figure upon the yellow sand as he stood gazing thoughtfully after me. When I looked again some minutes later he had disappeared.

Underneath the [illegible] where I walked one evening it was dull and [illegible] but their summits were rosy red, and the sea was brightened by the sinking sun. There were no clouds of importance in the sky, yet the dull groaning of the sea grew louder and stronger. I saw, far to the eastward, a brig beating up for Wick, with a reef in her topsails. It was evident that her captain had read the signs of nature as I had done. Behind her a long lurid haze lay low upon the water, concealing the horizon. "I had better push on," I thought to myself, "or the wind may rise before I can get back."

I suppose I must have been at least half a mile from the house when I suddenly stopped and listened breathlessly. My ears were [illegible] to the noises of nature, the sighing of the breeze and the sob of the waves, that any other sound made itself heard at a great distance. I waited, listening with all my ears. Yes, there it was again—a long drawn, shrill cry of despair, ringing over the sands and echoed back from the hills behind me—a piteous appeal for aid. It came from the direction of my house. I turned and ran back homeward at the top of my speed, ploughing through the sand, racing over the shingle. In my mind there was a great dim perception of what had occurred.

About a quarter of a mile from the house there is a high sand hill, from which the whole country round is visible. When I reached the top of this I paused for a moment. There was the old gray building—there the boat. Everything seemed to be as I had left it. Even as I gazed, however, the shrill scream was repeated, louder than before, and the next moment a tall figure emerged from my door, the figure of the Russian sailor. Over his shoulder was the white form of the young girl, and even in his haste he seemed to bear her tenderly and with gentle reverence. I could hear her wild cries and see her desperate struggles to break away from him. Behind the couple came my old housekeeper, staunch and true, as the aged dog, who can no longer bite, yet snarls with toothless gums at the intruder. She staggered feebly along at the heels of the ravisher, waving her long, thin arms, and hurling no doubt volleys of Scotch curses and imprecations at his head. I saw at a glance that he was making for the boat. A sudden hope sprang up in my soul that I might be in time to intercept him. I ran for the beach at the top of my speed. As I ran I slipped a cartridge into my revolver. This I determined should be the last of these invasions.

I was too late. By the time I reached the water's edge he was a hundred yards away, making the boat spring with every stroke of his powerful arms. I uttered a wild cry of impotent anger, and stamped up and down the sands like a maniac. He turned and saw me. Rising from his seat he made a graceful bow and waved his hand to me. It was not a triumphant or a derisive gesture. Even my furious and distempered mind recognised it as being a solemn and courteous leave-taking. Then he settled down to his oars once more and the little skiff shot away out over the bay. The sun had gone down now, leaving a single dull, red streak upon the water, which stretched away until it blended with the purple haze on the horizon. Gradually the skiff grew smaller and smaller as it sped across this lurid band, until the shades of night gathered round it and it became a mere blur upon the lonely sea. Then this vague loom died away also and darkness settled over it—a darkness which should never more be raised.

And why did I pace the solitary shore, hot and wrathful as a wolf whose whelp has been torn from it? Was it that I loved this Muscovite girl? No—a thousand times no. I am not one who, for the sake of a white skin or a blue eye, would belie my own life, and change the whole tenor of my thoughts and existence. My heart was untouched. But my pride—ah, there I had been cruelly wounded. To think that I had been unable to afford protection to the helpless one who craved it of me, and who relied on me. It was that which made my heart sick and sent the blood buzzing through my ears.

That night a great wind rose up from the sea, and the wild waves shrieked upon the shore as though they would tear it back with them into the ocean. The turmoil and the uproar were congenial to my vexed spirit. All night I wandered up and down, wet with spray and rain, watching the gleam of the white breakers and listening to the outcry of the storm. My heart was bitter against the Russian. I joined my feeble pipe to the screaming of the gale. "If he would but come back again!" I cried with clenched hands: "If he would but come back!"

He came back. When the gray light of morning spread over the Eastern sky and lit up the great waste of yellow, tossing waters, with the brown clouds drifting swiftly over them, then I saw him once again. A few hundred yards off along the sand there lay a long dark object, cast up by the fury of the waves. It was my boat, much shattered and splintered. A little farther on, a vague, shapeless something was washing to and fro in the shallow water all mixed with shingle and with seaweed. I saw at a glance that it was the Russian, face downwards and dead. I rushed into the water and dragged him up on the beach. It was only when I turned him over that I discovered that she was beneath him, his dead arms encircling her, his mangled body still intervening between her and the fury of the storm. It seemed that the fierce German Sea might beat the life from him, but with all its strength it was unable to tear this one dead man from the woman he loved. There were signs which led me to believe that during that awful night the woman's fickle mind had come at last to learn the worth of the true heart and strong arm which struggled for her and guarded her so tenderly. Why else should her little head be nestling so lovingly on his broad breast, while her yellow hair entwined itself with his flowing beard? Why, too, should there be that bright smile of ineffable happiness and triumph which death itself had not had power to banish from his dusky face? I fancy that death had been brighter to him than life had ever been.

Madge and I buried them there on the shores of the desolate northern sea. They lie in one grave deep down beneath the yellow sand. Strange things may happen in the world around them. Empires may rise and fall, dynasties may perish, great wars may come and go, but, heedless of it all, those two shall embrace each other for ever and aye, in their lonely shrine by the side of the sounding ocean. I sometimes have thought that their spirits flit like shadowy seamews over the wild waters of the bay. No cross or symbol marks their resting place, but old Madge puts wild flowers upon it at times, and when I pass on my daily walk and see the fresh blossoms scattered over the sand, I think of the strange couple who came from afar, and broke for a little space the dull tenor of my sombre life.

Honeymoon in the Sky for Summer Brides

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

As an exhilarant, aeroplaning is the best tonic for which the athletic Boston society girl is secretly pining and for which she is buying plans.

Vincent Club girls are the greatest of these plotters and planners and all are conjuring as to who among them will be first. "Why, of course that's an easy guess," gossiped a group of them the other day out at the Country Club race.

"Skylarking for ours," agreed they all, "and then good-bye, a long good-bye to pastimes that have been worn to a frazzle."

So full of dash and dazzle and romantic charm will the forecast made by these prophetic members of the excitative club that several of the would-be "aerolites" were shrieking with glee at the prospects, and right then and there impromptu aeronautic ballots were executed in celebration of future diversions.

"Think of a moonlight excursion over a blossoming world and"—— but the race was starting and she came back to earth or a little nearer to it while she watched eagerly to see if she was to lose or win the pin-money she had put up on her favorite.

But there was more gossip to follow, and from the fragments gathered amid the excitement of betting and watching, it seems that there are to be several aeroplane honeymoons for the brides.

"Perhaps Elizabeth and Bayard will start it," they chirped as the newly engaged pair, Miss Sears and Mr. Warren, advanced toward them, and when told what it was all about, declared they would.

The Brides of June

But while prospecting about future honeymoons, the brides of the past week clamor for attention. They were coldly treated and were forced far into the background on account of the Country Club races, Harvard Class Day and the many smart affairs incident to both.

But the week of weddings started out auspiciously on Monday with that of Miss Margaret Richardson and Gracie Hall Roosevelt at King's Chapel. On Tuesday Miss Dumaresq's wedding to Mr. Whitney in the Church of Our Saviour, Longwood, made an interesting matrimonial event, and on Wednesday was that of Miss Means and Mr. Reggio at St. Cecelia's Church.

Thursday boasted two brides, Miss Bullard, who married Mr. Dimock in the First Church, and Miss Winsor, who became the bride of Mr. Swift in the pretty little church at Chestnut Hill.

The week so gay with weddings and all other events came to a brilliant close yesterday with Miss Farnsworth's wedding to Mr. Loomis and the Country Club races as the strong drawing cards.

King's Chapel was well filled with fashionables on Monday for the wedding of Miss Richardson and Mr. Roosevelt, which was the most important of the matrimonial events in town.

The tall, slender bride in a clinging gown of white satin, over which fell the long, enveloping veil of lace which was caught to the prettily done coiffure with orange blossoms, was given in marriage by her distinguished father, Dr. Maurice Howe Richardson.

The group of handsome attendants, including many of her sister-debutantes, in their white satin gowns, over which were worn long coats of cerise chiffon and hats of tuscan straw trimmed with cerise, made a picturesque foil for the pretty white-robed bride.

Ethel Roosevelt There

Among the bride's attendants were Miss Ethel Roosevelt, daughter of Colonel Roosevelt and a cousin of the bridegroom, Miss Kate Ferrington of Minneapolis, who spends much of her time in Boston; Miss Eleanor Bonsor of Salem, Miss Margaret Ramsay of Wellesley Hills and the Misses Ruth Harrington, Gertrude Hunnewell, Frances Nichols and Rose Balcomsall.

Included in the group of ushers were Lincoln MacVeagh of New York and Charles Taussig of St. Louis, classmates; Peter Cooper Bryce and Vanderbilt Webb of New York; Richard Baker of New Haven, Maurice Freemont Smith of Washington, and Roland Brown Batchelder of Salem, also three older brothers of the bride, Dr. Edward F. Richardson, M. H. Richardson, Jr., and Henry Richardson.

The wedding of Miss Dumaresq and Mr. Whitney was also an important one, though very quiet on account of the recent death of the bride's father, Philip E. Dumaresq.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Reginald Heber Howe. The bride, who wore a most becoming gown of white satin and a long tulle veil, was given in marriage by her brother, Philip Dumaresq. Her sister, Miss Lillian Dumaresq, was her maid of honor and only attendant. Geoffrey Whitney, a brother of the groom, was best man, and the ushers were Stanton Whitney of New York, a cousin; Mark Hopkins of Bryn Mawr, John S. Amen and Henry Lowell, classmates of the groom.

Miss Dumaresq is one of the most important members of the Vincent Club and has figured prominently in society ever since her debut. Mr. Whitney is the son of Mrs. Jennie S. Whitney of "Rockledge," Milton, and is a Harvard man, a member of the Wednesday, the birthday of all, had but one important wedding to its credit, that of pretty Clair Means and Antonio Reggio.

It, like most of the other weddings of the week, was a quiet affair, taking place at St. Cecelia's Church, Back Bay, at 11:30, and followed by a small reception at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Arthur Little.

The ceremony was witnessed only by the immediate relatives of the two families. The bride, who was a charming picture in her gown of white satin, was given in marriage by her mother, Mrs. Arthur Little.

She had as her only attendant her sister, Miss Ann Means, who is to be a debutante of the coming season.

Andrew William Reggio, Harvard '08, whose engagement was recently announced to Miss Marian Sears Loring, was his brother's best man. There were no ushers.

Upon their return from their honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Reggio will go to Pompity Farms, where they will make their all-the-year-round home.

One of the prettiest girls in Boston is what is generally said of Miss Nellie Ormond, daughter of James Ormond of Boylston street, Back Bay, and sister of the former Lilla Ormond, who made such an enviable reputation for herself as a concert singer.

Miss Ormond is her sister's close second in point of charm and personal appearance and is extremely popular among her many friends.

She is talented also and is quite as interesting as was her charming sister. At her sister's marriage in the Spring she was maid of honor and came in for almost as much admiring attention as did the bride.

Mrs. Alfred Vincent Kidder and her son, Vincent, are at Appleton Farms, Ipswich, where they are to spend the Summer.

Miss Elisabeth Carpenter, who is with her parents at their Summer place at Swampscott, has been entertaining some of her young lady friends at week ends at her home.

Dr. and Mr. Chicks have closed their Beacon street home, and with Miss Mabel Chick and William C. Chick are at their North Shore home in Swampscott.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter C. Bayliss of Commonwealth avenue and their family, the Misses Charlotte and Ruth Bayliss and George D., Walter M. and Edmund Bayliss, have sailed for Europe and will spend the Summer touring abroad.

Among recent additions to the Boston colony at Dublin, N. H., are Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Childs of Bay State road, who are at "Aldworth," their Summer place there.

Thursday was the wedding day of Miss Constance Bullard of Dedham and Commonwealth avenue, and her marriage to Edward J. Dimock of New York was one of the largest of the week.

The bride is a member of the Vincent Club and was one of the most popular debutantes of her season several years ago. She is the daughter of Mrs. John Alexander Bullard, of "Glen Haven." Miss Jane Bullard is her sister and there are three brothers.

Mr. Dimock is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Dimock of New York, and graduated from Yale in '10. Since then he has been studying law at the Harvard Law school.

The young couple are to reside in Boston upon their return from the honeymoon.

Mrs. John N. Jordan (Lillian Terhune), wife of Paymaster Jordan, U. S. N., has returned to her home in Portsmouth, N. H., after a two weeks' visit with her sister, Mrs. Carpenter, at Swampscott.

SOCIAL SET RUSHES TO HOMES OF LUXURY ON THE NORTH SHORE

JUNE'S holiday week is a signal for the North Shore cities to hasten to their luxurious beach and country estates, scattered from Manchester and Beverly, Cohasset, Hamilton and Marblehead have each a part in the reason for the season's activity on the coast resorts of late the hotel crowds and swings and the entertaining of host that has brought in open the season's gaiety.

The social whirl of summer is the quest pleasure craft that floats on the of fashion of great wealth and importance along to the number and grandeur of white residences found on the coast of the vacation of late years and that the summer of 1912 promises as much success as those of previous years.

Of course the premier guest of the North shore, President Taft, is not here now, so let his thoughts wander back to the seemingly Elysian fields of the Country Club on the links at the Tedesco Inn or even to his own broad piazza, where peace lingers in quiet repose.

None of the North Shore folk are permitted to filter through the fingers of strife and business, even memories must be stolen, even though sweeter therein seldom has mid June found the country more attractive, the wooded roads being in perfect condition, the usual injurious pests been entirely conquered, and distance is just one round of pure enjoyment.

The flowers have blossomed in unusual profusion, the grass is still as fresh and green as in early Spring, while the numerous brooks and ponds are at a higher level than in years of immoderate rainfall, lovelier than the street lamps of the wonderfully blue ocean, with its formal gardens, the tennis courts, the golf links and the bathing beaches and all surrounded with the magic that modern landscape gardening has learned to foster.

Each settlement seems prettier than the other, due, no doubt, to the striving for effect by the devotees of each, for the keenest rivalry exists between the older residents, who have been coming to the North Shore for years, and the more recent comers, from the West and South, who have improved upon the natural beauties of the shore and added an air of formality by their great villas and immense areas of laid out lawn and garden.

When President Taft arrives he will find everything ready for his reception, as if it had been arranged in advance. All his friends of former Summers will be established, the usual round of business receptions will be under way, and it will be like stepping back into the midst of his own circle after a little week end visit.

Even the pleasures of packing and moving will be denied him, for the word is coming in advance of the President, in order to make up for the lack of interest, however, occasioned by the absence of the President, there is young Charlie Taft, and he is bad! able to keep things moving and create more excitement than his distinguished father, then it is because he is not feeling well, and that never gets sick in fact, if he did, the change would be so striking that from then on even silk things up a little more than usual.

SEASON OF JOY FOR YOUNG FOLKS OPENS ON THE SOUTH SHORE

ONCE the bell has rung for the close of the schools, the holiday season along the South Shore is in full swing and the merry shouts resounding from the shores, the playgrounds and the club acres are testimony of the appreciation of the children of their release from work.

Somehow these little folks never seem to grow up, or if they do, there are others to take their place, for the crop of youthful sojourners is ever on the increase. They are to be found to the fore in the bathing feats, either in the heavy surf or in the milder bay sport, they play golf in the order of a professional, and the numerous tennis courts with the little players lined about the sides, are proof of their devotion to this game of science and skill.

The juniors have their baseball clubs, their yachting clubs, their tramping societies, and even enjoy the supreme luxury of going off to camp for several days, with the added advantage of being near the base of supplies and home finances.

The open country, the generous areas of woods, the sparkling streams, well stocked with fish, the proximity of farms, the beautiful ponds, all contribute to the pleasure of the Summer sojourner and the youth of the communities have the opportunity to enjoy all the various stages of childish pleasure and still remain under the guidance of the parental authority

The [illegible] of the South Shore is its appeal to people of moderate means, the expenses of the family being reduced to the minimum. Down along the North Scituate and Cohasset shore the most impressive villas may be had for a modest sum, in comparison to the advantages they have to offer, while farther down the shore, through Brant Rock, Marshfield and the Plymouths, an attractive little home with large yard and pretty gardens is to be secured for exceedingly moderate rates.

Then, too, the problem of the grocer and the market man solves itself in a most satisfactory fashion, while the meat man has to do very little to induce the fish dealer [illegible] to do his purchasing at his store home. The rates charged for the articles offered make a sojourn at these little resorts seem a trip into fairyland for the household when the bills come in, which is not insistently but merely in the regular course of things.

Many of the year-round natives have their little strawberry patch, guarded and tended with the utmost care and producing luscious fruit. They usually have a patch of green truck that makes the city visitor open his eyes and exclaim over the rural beauties of the country produce. Then, it is abundance, and the [illegible] apples are no luxuries to the beach cottager among the Shore.

Fish are so easily caught that the orders of a trip to Maine rob a journey to the shore and the home friends taken on added attractiveness in consequence. Young chickens, real guaranteed chickens, ducklings, squabs, all the delicacies that the epicure demands, may be had in plenty and [illegible] small sum, in comparison to the rates of the city shopkeeper, who [illegible] in doing his best cannot compete with his country neighbor in this respect.

It is no small wonder that the South Shore Summer folk was enthusiastic of their country homes and extend their season each year, many until the November holidays.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR "CURES" THE NEW YORK WORLD COMMENTING ON THESE SO-CALLED "CURES"

Says—They "have numbered their victims by the hundreds of thousands."

The New York World, conceded by journalists everywhere as one of the ablest and independent, fearless newspapers devoted to the public welfare, published an article of interest to women about depilatories. While it commended the use of depilatories for toilet necessitary, it also points out the impossibility of practically all the preparations for superfluous hair "cures." It is reprinted in part. Read it

"Depilatory manufacturers have played on her faith and ignorance and have practically succeeded in getting away with publishing erroneous statements and unfounded claims concerning the alleged efficacy of their methods or agencies to eradicate superfluous hair. The actual importance of having the treatment nonpoisonous, antiseptic and germicidal was the last to be considered by them, and have been left to the last ten years have numbered their victims by the hundreds of thousands. Many of these have been driven to despair. Empty promises have been made only to get the money. The marvelous thing is that women have not become addicted to digesting and reject all treatments for good.

"But her hope [illegible] was not in vain. [illegible] only a few years ago the world was startled by the announcement that [illegible] it had proved to be a revelation in modern science. The Scientific World investigated the claims for this discovery and the results by which it was proved to be true. [illegible] Its record is unsurpassed by any [illegible] they have been eminently successful.

"The news of its remarkable qualities spread rapidly. It is now known and widely used from coast to coast and from the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. What is more to the point, it has been indorsed by prominent physicians, representatives of medical journals and leading magazines on numerous occasions. There is too much at stake to risk such indorsements if they are not true to the letter. Only the result of repeated chemical experiments and a thorough knowledge of the principles of hair growth would stand against the investigation of such authorities. The DeMiracle Chemical Company is open and shows its every detail. The Indorsements board in every direction. A little probing on the part of the PAPER disclosed the fact that they are published and sent broadcast, with the identity and address of the writer or publication added. This is the standing block of all so-called remedies. A reputable member of the medical profession or a publication in good standing could never afford to be identified with anything that savors of a fake, and a voluntary praise given through these channels is not to be bought with money. It is given on its merits and it counts for much. There is no evidence wanting to prove that DeMiracle has not stood the test of time, for it was found by the representative of THE PAPER in the most prominent department and drug stores in New York City the use of DeMiracle was invited on all sides. The proprietors of the largest of these establishments said: 'The sale of DeMiracle is increasing every day, and we have nothing but praise for it all the time.' Others [illegible] the same [illegible] to others.

"For years we have been cautioning women against being defrauded by so-called superfluous hair remedies. In spite of all warning, it seems that some are always willing to be humbugged, because, as the World says: "The fakes put on the market in the last ten years have numbered their victims by the hundreds of thousands." Many of these have been driven to despair. Empty promises have been made only to get the money. # WHY MILK IS SCARCE AND DEAR IN IRELAND

VALUE OF HORSE RACES

Southern Councillor Makes Plea for Municipal Racecourse, Citing English Success.

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN

[illegible] getting dearer and scarcer in A[illegible] towards the con[illegible]. Of all countries or [illegible] plentiful and where [illegible] grows [illegible] green all through [illegible] supply has created a [illegible] to [illegible] the appointment of a Royal Commission of Inquiry.

[illegible] has been appointed by [illegible] Lord [illegible] the Earl of Aberdeen "to inquire into the alleged scarcity of milk in some parts of Ireland and to report upon the causes of the deficiency where it exists, its effect upon the public health, and the means whereby the deficiency can be [illegible] and also to inquire into and report [illegible] the dangers of contamination [illegible] infection in the present [illegible] the methods best adapted to [illegible] these dangers."

The importance of the work of the commission, as it is viewed officially, may be judged by the names and standing [illegible] and professional of the men and women Lord Aberdeen has asked to conduct the inquiry.

A Strong Commission.

[illegible] Patrick O'Neill of the Dublin County Council, Lady Everard of [illegible], Miss Margaret McNeill, Inspector of Industrial Schools; Sir Stewart Woodhouse, M. D. of Dublin; Dr. George A. Moorehead of [illegible]; Alexander Wilson of Belfast; [illegible] O'Brien, president of the Royal [illegible] Academy; John R. Campbell, [illegible] of the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction; A[illegible], principal of the Royal Veterinary [illegible].

This commission [illegible] in going about its [illegible] inquiries have already been held in Belfast, Cork, Limerick, Newry, Ennis, Killarney, Tralee, Galway, Clifden and Castlebar. Before the commission ends its local investigations every agricultural centre in the country will be gone over with a sharp [illegible] and a strong searchlight to determine [illegible] prevailing as to the country's milk supply and its environments.

[illegible] its investigations the commission [illegible] before it milk vendors, farmers, [illegible], goat keepers, veterinary surgeons, clergymen, farm laborers and dairy [illegible]. In fact, every person who has any connection whatever with the people's milk supply is not only given [illegible] his views and his [illegible] to the Royal Commission [illegible] compelled to appear before the commission and give its members the full benefit of the contents of his mind and of his experience upon this important question.

Cows Give Less Milk.

The appointment of the commission is due to the [illegible] of the Women's National Health Association, of which Lady Aberdeen, wife of the viceroy, has for years been the directing spirit.

During the examination of the cattle breeders in the various districts the interesting fact was disclosed that the yield of a cow per annum is much less today than it was thirty or even twenty years ago. At present the average yield of an Irish cow does not exceed 450 gallons. But intelligent farmers told the commission that by the keeping of milk records and by eliminating unprofitable animals they have been able to increase the yield of their herds to 600 or 700 gallons per cow.

It was agreed by nearly every witness that no person should be allowed to [illegible] milk either as farmer or vendor [illegible] by license [illegible] granted by the [illegible] conditions are fulfilled.

A stringent license system, the commission feels, would drive many small vendors of milk out of business, but it would also result in milk of a better quality being supplied to the purchaser.

Why Milk is Scarce

[illegible] with the creamery, [illegible]

[illegible] it is known legislation will be asked for, compelling the [illegible] to sell milk retail to all who [illegible] for it, no matter how small the quantity required.

As [illegible] result of these inquiries the commission [illegible] found the scarcity of milk [illegible] of Winter dairying [illegible]

Vigilant and Alert Officials.

At a [illegible] held recently in Cork, one of the councillors complained of the action of the [illegible] of the City Park racecourse in reducing the value of the prizes for the annual race meetings. This action, he said, was detrimental to the prestige of the races, as owners of great racers would not send them to Cork to compete at the meetings.

Where Horses Run the Town.

Then the councillor went on to point out the value of horse racing to the city which nurtures the sport. He said that in Doncaster, the great centre of racing in England, not one penny of rates (taxes) do the people of that city pay. The proceeds of the race course pays the whole upkeep of the town, which has a population of 38,000. The gentleman pointed out other places in England such as Hurst, Sandown, Plumpton, where there are no taxes, as the proceeds of the horse races meet all civic expenses. All over England and Scotland he said, the town or city authorities are taking over race courses and running the meetings. The councillor thought it is high time the city of Cork followed suit. By managing the races the city would get a revenue of $25,000 a year. The gentleman has succeeded in making his fellow city fathers put on their thinking caps.

One of the more recent signs of the changing times and conditions in Ireland is seen in the acquisition by wealthy American Irish of some of the old mansions and castles which for generations belonged to the titled landlord class, now deprived by law of their selfish privileges.

Holyrood Castle and demesne, a beautiful place near Dublin, has been bought by Thomas F. Harvey of New York. Daniel F. Coholan of New York is now the owner of Glandore House, in the County of Cork. Drumahair House, in Leitrim, has been purchased by Michael O'Connor, who when a boy had the gamekeeper's dogs set upon him for fishing in the river near the mansion; Richard Croker, as is well known, is the owner and occupant of Glencairne House, in the suburbs of Dublin; the [illegible] of [illegible] possession [illegible] House [illegible] and Castle Strange, one of the ancient estates of R[illegible], is now the property of Thomas F. Mulry, the head of one of the big banks of New York.

Sixty or seventy years ago the London Times gloated over the fact that the Irish were going and going with a vengeance. It [illegible] to look today as if there is a turning of the tide.

The feis of the Boston Alliance will take place in the Fall. A committee was appointed to secure a hall. The Alliance has also voted to recommend to all persons who go to Ireland to visit Dublin, the greatest repository of Celtic art and interest in the [illegible] and which is rapidly becoming a [illegible] centre of Irish national life. Visitors [illegible] strive to be in Dublin especially [illegible] Oireachtas week, from June 29 to July 5.

All are under sixteen. The girls have already won a reputation for their ambitious work with the needle and their strict attention to all the classes.

The club is composed of a number of prominent Catholic women who pay the [illegible] expense of the clubhouse, which [illegible] comfortably appointed.

Few associations in the city are more deserving of encouragement. The women at its head have, as their sole object, the provision of proper social surroundings for young girls who otherwise would be seeking evening amusement in the streets.

A few years ago, a commodious house on Washington street, just beyond the Cathedral of the Holy Cross, was acquired by a committee of women with Mrs. McCarthy of Brookline, at their head, and was fitted up with class and work rooms and neatly furnished parlors for social recreation.

[illegible] with time at their disposal, volunteered to conduct the different evening classes and also to contrive social features which would make the clubhouse as attractive as possible for the growing girls in whose interest the association was formed.

From the start the project has been a success. The classes have been well attended and every co-operation given to the philanthropic women to whose efforts the club owes its existence.

PITTSBURG, June 22.—The ninth annual convention of the Catholic Educational Association of the United States will open at Carnegie Institute here on Tuesday. # IRISH CLUBS ARE BUSY WITH REPORTS

Plans on Foot to Acquire Land for Track and Field Games.

Reports giving a review of the work accomplished for the first six months of the year are now ready for the members of the Central Council. The gain, both in finance and membership has been doubled over the corresponding term last year.

A number of the clubs are now paying a sick benefit to the members and in some of the organizations a substantial donation is given to the family of a deceased member.

Literary committees report that the series of lectures, socials and club entertainments during the past season have been of a very high standard.

Immigration Problems.

The Immigration Committee is now at work on an important matter and will report at the meeting to be held in Deacon Hall on Tuesday evening, July 2.

Members of the Sligo, Galway, Mayo, Leitram and Roscommon clubs are contemplating leasing a large tract of land in a suburban district with a view of having a suitable field for track and Gaelic events. The members of the above clubs representing the province of Connaught are among the best workers in the entire district and the procuring of the new grounds will fill a long felt want. Games could be played every Saturday and holiday, and as the Massachusetts Legislature will undoubtedly pass a bill within a few years allowing amateur events on Sunday afternoon, the clubs will be prepared with a fine field for the games.

Roscommon to Try Again.

While the Roscommon Club did not make a big financial success of the first field day owing to a number of conditions, such as the street railway strike, the parade in Charlestown and the fact that June 17 is not a legal holiday, the experience gained was worth a great deal to the committee. They feel confident the next event will be a big success. The games were among the best seen this season especially the football matches between Galway and Cork, and between Kerry and Tipperary. The games were very close, Galway just shading Cork, and Kerry nosing out Tipperary on a field that was rapidly becoming dark. Return matches will surely be played. The club will meet in Harrison Hall Sunday afternoon, July 6, to hear final reports of the committee.

The Antrim Association will meet in Conant Hall, No. 20 Conant street, next Sunday evening. President James M. Morgan will appoint a committee to arrange for the first grand outing.

Carlow's President Away

Carlow members will elect a temporary presiding officer this evening as President James A. Connors has left for an extended trip to Ireland. He will bring back a number of souvenirs to the club members.

Another large class of candidates will be initiated this evening by President Daniel McLaughlin of the Donegal Club. The meeting will be in Needham Hall, No. 1488 Columbus avenue.

Owing to the large increase in membership during the past few months larger meeting quarters will have to be procured and a committee appointed for that purpose will make its report tonight.

All arrangements for the June outing to be had in connection with the Cavan and Langford clubs will be made at the meeting of the Fermanagh Association in Needham Hall, Roxbury next Wednesday evening. Hugh Fitzpatrick is chairman of the Fermanagh committee.

Tyrone Club Meets

President James Harvey dedicated the first meeting of the Tyrone Association in McKinley Hall, Union square, Somerville, by initiating four candidates. The members were pleased with the new quarters. Remarks were made by William McNamee, Patrick McCrossen, Peter McAffney, John O'Neill, Miss Agnes Gallagher, Miss Sarah Call and Francis Timoney. Miss Ann McGoldrick presided at the piano. Arrangements were made for a club social in the above hall to be held next Thursday evening.

Galway Ladies Association will meet in the future at Russell Hall, Deacon Building, on the second Sunday and fourth Thursday evenings.

Any former resident of County Wicklow desiring to become a member of the Wicklow Club can obtain all details as to aims, objects and assessments by writing to William O'Leary, No. 37 Tremont street, Cambridge, Mass.

REVIVE SCENES OF SCHOOLGIRL DAYS

Graduates of St. Patrick's Academy, Roxbury, to Meet Next Wednesday Evening.

To renew early friendships and enjoy again the scenes and incidents of their school-day life, the members of the alumnae of St. Patrick School, Forest street and Mount Pleasant avenue, Roxbury, will meet for their annual supper in the old Vine Street Church, corner Vine and Dudley streets, Wednesday evening.

Special interest is attached to this year's gathering because of the fact that only recently the Sisters celebrated the silver jubilee of the founding of the school, and also the twenty-fifth anniversary of their coming to Boston as teachers.

The arrangements for the reunion are in the hands of Miss Annie C. Graves, president, and Miss Myra Condry, secretary of the alumnae. They are assisted by several sub-committees.

Leitrim Club will omit the Sunday meetings during the summer. The club social and business meetings will be held on the second Thursday evenings in Russell Hall, Deacon Building. President James Ro[illegible] and his associates have prepared an interesting series of programs.

To Aid Consumptives Home.

The annual garden party of The Free Home for Consumptives will be this year replaced by a garden whist to be held on the grounds of the home, 4?8 Quincy street, Dorchester, on Saturday, July 6. Hundreds of cards have been issued and the event promises to be a great success. The gifts for this occasion are very elaborate and attractive.

In Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain, Even in Prosperous France, Socialism Threatens Existing Regimes—"What Is Wrong?" Puzzles Public Men—Likened to Conditions a Century Ago

By JOHN L. EDDY.

Special Correspondent to the Boston American.

Special Cable to the Sunday American.

LONDON, June 22.—What is the matter with England? Every man who writes for newspapers or magazines, every man who makes speeches, every member of Parliament, every public man, acknowledges there is something the matter, and has a different answer.

One national strike is following another in bewildering succession. The best known labor leader in England is in jail for inciting the army to mutiny. The cost of living is increasing at an alarming rate. Taxes are getting higher every year. The burden of supporting the fleet is annually becaming more onerous. The railroad men are threatening to tie up the country again. Every Sunday thousands of working men with huge banners march either through Trafalgar square or Hyde Park playing the "Marseillaise" and cheering for Socialism.

PICTURE IS NOT OVERDRAWN.

"It is a sentiment which is in no way concealed among foreign observers of the British situation, that any severe stress of external difficulty or threatened disaster might be as welcome to the revolutionary allies of the Radical party as the disasters of the Franco-German war of 1870 were to the French Republican malcontents.

As soon as misfortune fell on the imperial armies at Woerth and Sedan, the Rede of Paris and the provinces overturned the State behind the backs of the discomfitted soldiery; and tens of thousands of madmen esteemed the proclamation of the Republic to be cheaply purchased by the captivity of three hundred thousand French troops and the loss of two French provinces.

"Would the Keir Hardies and Ben Tilletts be more reliable in an hour of national humiliation? And the inadequate policy of the Asquith Government, both with regard to army and fleet, certainly seems to invite humiliation."

The same pessimistic note is struck in an article on "The Future of the British Race," by Henry Page Croft, M. P., in the same number of the Outlook. Mr. Croft, after producing an unpleasant army of figures to show the comparative deterioration of Great Britain, both as regards population and naval strength, says:

"A British-American colony of little more than a century ago, today is become one of the greatest world powers, with a population twice as great as the United Kingdom, whence she sprang.

"The German Empire, which did not exist in 1870, today is the greatest military power in the world, with the second greatest navy the world has ever known.

"The Japanese, who twelve years ago hardly counted among the world nations, today are numbered among the first class powers, with an army of 220,000 men on a peace footing, a war footing of 2,000,000, and a middle-fleet which was able to inflict crushing defeats in detail upon the naval and military forces of the Russian Empire.

Yearly Growing Weaker.

"Whilst the huge rival empires of the world are consolidating and holding their markets more, Great Britain is shedding the best of her sons to the extent of a quarter of a million a year, and her increase in the application of home capital fails behind at a still more alarming rate, with the result that she is yearly growing comparatively weaker. To what conclusion, then, are we irresistibly driven?

"The United Kingdom is being rapidly overtaken as the great nation of shopkeepers. She is challenged as a naval power. She is reduced to a second-class position with regard to her land forces. Her wealth supremacy no longer exists. In overseas trade the United States is now her equal. She has fewer men trained to arms than any first-class power.

"There is only one certainty about this position, and that is that unless something happens, the sun of the British Isles must set."

Other Lands Little Better Off.

Gloomy as the outlook may seem in England, it is no gloomier than the outlook in most of the other great European countries. Socialism looks comparatively few votes of being in control of the German Reichstag. If 110 [illegible] was struck at such an [illegible] in Germany, Socialism probably would be in control.

In Austro-Hungary revolution is boiling just below the surface of public affairs. The doctrine of Socialism has spread enormously there in the last few years. The recent rioting in Huda Pesth was suppressed only by promises of important reforms made to the leaders who are seeking to establish there a nearer approach to government by the people.

Italy is honeycombed with Socialism, but the war with Turkey is diverting public attention, and appeals to patriotism are for a time holding in check the forces that aim to upset the monarchy.

The recent strikes on the railroads in Spain were of Socialistic origin. Revolutionary disturbances are being constantly suppressed by the military.

From Portugal, where revolution was successful only two years ago, there comes constantly stories of counter revolution, Socialistic uprisings, and efforts to overthrow the monarchy. It is undeniable that the present government is maintaining its hold only by the exercise of drastic measures.

Immigration Must Save France.

France, prosperous as she may be is not without her troubles. The war in Morocco was a serious matter. Anarchy and lawlessness show their heads every week in unexpected places. And with it all the birth rate has fallen so low that if all France to be annexed to a free republic" not even aroused the opposition of the mobs.

Whatever may be wrong with England it is without doubt the same thing that is wrong with Germany, Italy, France, Spain, Russia and Austria.

Many keen observers see in present European conditions a strong analogy to the conditions that existed throughout Europe a century ago.

— ROYALTY AT HENLEY.

King and Queen Will Go to Regatta in State Barge.

LONDON, June 22.—Henley, which is to receive the visit of the King and Queen for the first time, will this year distinguish itself the epithet of "royal." For some reason unexplained, the great river carnival has not up to now been much favored by royal patronage, but the sovereigns' visit this season will do much to make up for past neglect. The arrival of their Majesties in the royal state barge will be a spectacle as novel as it is picturesque. The barge is manned by eighteen watermen in scarlet-pleated tunics with the royal arms emblazoned on the back, blue breeches, and quaint velvet caps.

PARIS, June 22.—A world's record for altitude for dirigible balloons was made by the scout dirigible Conte, an airship belonging to the French army, which attained a height of 9,925 feet. The altitude record of dirigible balloons has hitherto been held by the French military dirigible Adjutant Reau, which on December 7, 1911, ascended to 7,000 feet.

August Belmont Gives Horses French Names

"Qu'elle est Belle" and Amoreux III. Among Pretty Things Selected for His Racers.

PARIS, June 22.—Be delighted in August Belmont with our French turf that he has placed a permanent order with his trainer to call all his horses by French names. Hence we find such names as "Qu'elle est Belle" and "Amoreux III." The former is the lily which carried off as enviable prize at historical Chantilly because the jockey on a rival horse pulled up his steed, thinking that he had won the race. The newspapers forgot to mention that this was the second time that the jockey seemed to be suffering the same kind of mental absentia.

Mr. Belmont, like Frank J. Gould, has entered the lists to beat William K. Vanderbilt. It was interesting to note that Belmont and Vanderbilt horses, running neck and neck the other day, until finally the former's crack ran ahead. Though Mr. Belmont has been on our turf only a little over a year, he has carried off some enviable prizes. It is almost four years since he brought over his brood mares and stallions, and his stables now are of a much better quality and as large in quantity as those of William K. Vanderbilt.

At last Sam Hildreth, the American trainer, has succeeded in getting a license in France. He has established himself at Maison LaFitte, and is training for Baron Gerrie de Rothschild.

Hildreth's difficulty in getting a license arose from a recent ruling of the Jockey Club to the effect that no license will in future be given in France to anyone who has not resided there for three years. Hildreth has avoided this ruling by becoming a private trainer to Baron Morris de Rothschild, but as such he will not be allowed to train for anybody else.

Countess Seizes Her Husband's Wardrobe

PARIS, June 22.—Former Mrs. Nellie C. Bennett, a wealthy Philadelphia widow, is seeking a divorce from her titled husband, Count Gustave de Hain and-Armand. The Count is a Hollander, who, hearing that Mrs. Bennett had large estates in and around Germantown, Pa., promptly laid successful seige to her heart and hand.

The marriage took place nine months ago, but the matrimonial life ran roughly from the first. The Count did his worst to induce new arm Countess to leave his congenial domicile, but refused to quite the house for which her Germantown money was paying, and retaliated by seizing the Count's clothes on the plea that she had paid for them. A French judge, however, compelled her to surrender the Count's clothes, pointed out that as she was married under the common law of France, half her property belonged to her husband, and wound up by directing the Count to pay his wife $200 a month out of what was her own money. This was too much, and she decided to begin suit for divorce.

Melba Jealous of the Russian Ballet

LONDON, June 22.—Mme. Melba finds that she gets more flattery and funds in Australia than in England. She made a fortune during her last tour of Australia, her native land, and is planning another voyage there.

Although Melba's name appeared in all the advance announcements of the Covent Garden syndicate, she will not sing in London this season. Her decision not to sing here is due to vexation, tinged with jealousy. Melba is much annoyed by the fact that the Russian ballet is regarded as Covent Garden's leading attraction. On the nights the ballets are given the price of stalls is raised from $5 to $7.50. The stalls were $7.50 on Melba nights a few seasons ago, but recently she sang to $5 stalls.

"Shakespeare's Land Coming" Mrs. Cornwallis West's Plan

MRS. CORNWALLIS WEST

She Aims to Bring Living Page of History to New York and San Francisco Fair.

ELIZABETHAN TIME SHOWN

Houses, Taverns, Drake's Ship and Theatres in Exhibit—Old Music Rendered.

LONDON, June 22.—Mrs. George Cornwallis West is persevering with her plans to take "Shakespeare's England" plans to America, and has reached the conclusion that she will try the adventure. It is her idea to hold the exhibition in New York, and later at the Panama Exposition in San Francisco in 1915.

Mrs. Cornwallis West has organized the affair practically unaided, and the business conduct is solely in her charge. She is in her office regularly each day and presides at the official board meetings. This does not prevent her from attending social functions in town, many of which she is sponsor.

In her town house, near Park lane, where she received the Boston AMERICAN correspondent, she talked freely and hopefully about her plans.

"Shakespeare's England" is at Paris Court, one of London's Olney Islands. It is really a large village taken out of the Elizabethan period. The houses, the taverns, the theatres, Drake's ship, the Revenge, are all reproduced faithfully. Shakespearian performances are given in the Globe Theatre under the management of capable people. Concerts of old music are held in the Fortune Theatre.

"Yes," she said, "we are hoping to take 'Shakespeare's England' to both New York and San Francisco. We have had very many requests for it, and in all probability it will go. The only difficulty is the size of the exhibition. It is very large, and a suitable site is not easy to get.

"America has a huge Shakespeare public, and we interest them and ordinary readers quite as much. What we have always tried to do is to give a reproduction that will allow the visitor to carry away a definite picture of what England was like in Shakespearian time. The costumes of the attendants are of the period and help create an atmosphere."

Many of the houses in "Shakespeare's England" are to be for exhibition. One is taken by the Anti-Suffrage League, but there is no suffrage house and this was pointed out to Mrs. Cornwallis-West.

"That is purely a coincidence," she explained, "and I do not mean that I am either for or against suffrage for women. The Suffragettes are welcome if they come. And that reminds me of some one else. It is that since a woman ruled England in Shakespeare's time, the Suffragettes have the better of the question there."

Mrs. Reid Sad at Having to Live in Smaller House

Despite Faint Denials, Fact Is Ambassador Must Leave Dorchester House in October.

By CHESTER OVERTON.

Special Cable to Sunday AMERICAN.

LONDON, June 22.—Ambassador and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid must vacate Dorchester House in October; leave the scene of the many splendid entertainments they have given there and take a smaller residence.

This sad fact remains notwithstanding one or two faint denials of it. The approaching marriage of Sir George Halford, who owns Dorchester House, to Mrs. Menzies, has completely upset the plans of the American Ambassador and his wife. They have been fortunate in securing Dudley House, in Park Lane. This residence is owned by Sir J. B. Robinson, the South African magnate, who passes most of his time at Johannesburg.

But Dudley House is not much to the liking of Mrs. Reid, accustomed as she is to numerous reception rooms both in London and New York. The rooms in her new home are comfortable but do not compare in size with those of Dorchester House.

At the back of Dudley House, however, is a picture gallery which can be used as a ballroom. Mrs. Reid will have to "hound out" some of her servants; there will not be accommodations for the great staff of servants she maintains.

GREAT SOCIALIST GIVES HIS CURE FOR THE COST OF LIVING

High Tariff an Aggravation, Not a Cause—Blames Poor Development of Goods.

By PAUL PIERRE RIGNAUX

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, June 22.—Jean Jaures, leader of the French Socialists, deep thinker, most eloquent orator, Professor of Philosophy, Deputy from Paris, the John Burns of Paris but with the literary polish of a Morley or Balfour, was asked to give the AMERICAN his views on that great economic problem of the day—the high cost of living. In reply, and speaking in a corridor of the French House of Deputies, he made this profound and original statement:

By JEAN JAURES.

You ask me to describe the causes of the high cost of living and to present a remedy. Let me begin by asking you this:

What can be the organic crime of a country whose natural resources are the richest, but whose bread is the dearest?

France should have a national organization to buy up her wheat and similar food products. Then the cost of living could not be raised as it is now. Such a national organization would give us efficient stability of the prices of foodstuffs. If we can organize the country for national defense, why cannot the nation give us an organization which will end starvation prices forever?

National Organization Growing.

Already the more far seeing nations are organizing certain branches of production on a national basis. Sweden is organizing her state mines so as to preserve their coveted minerals; Germany is creating a national potash industry.

The high cost of living has made life intolerable. The state must step in and save the citizens.

The capitalists have brought about this state, upon the capitalists of life, have starved the producer, have precipitated a crisis in society.

A high tariff does not explain the high cost of living; it aggravates it, but does not originate it.

We find life dear even in free trade countries. The organic crime which is the main cause of the high cost of living is deeper than the tariff. Indeed, there are many causes of the high cost of living.

First, capitalism has developed out of all proportion the industrial products which are not instantly necessary to the people of life. Capitalism has done this to attract the entire abandonment of agricultural production, which has been allowed to languish and die.

Another most striking is the present condition of the economic world is the sharp disproportion which exists between agricultural products on this planet.

On the other hand, agriculture does not admit of such rapid financial movements, and bewildering financial surprises.

Time halts in the world of agriculture, but not in that of industry. In the latter days we communicate the impetus of his own inspiration to the wheel of production.

But in agricultural production man must struggle with the inclemency of the seasons and their inevitable cycles.

So capital disposes of the surplus accumulated in ever-developing industrial production to the neglect of its necessary basis, and foundation, namely agricultural production.

What difference does the high cost of living make to those millionaires of riches who determine the application of our economic forces? To these people the cost of the necessaries of life is as nothing.

So a frenzy of luxury exists side by side with the most aggravated evils of poverty.

Concentration of City Population.

Another cause of the high cost of living is the contraction of the urban rural population in our cities, but this follows naturally from the cause I have just mentioned.

But the third and most crushing cause of the high cost of living is the tremendous waste of resources to maintain an armed peace.

This strikes directly at agricultural production. In France millions of young men are withdrawn from production labor. $2,000,000,000 are taken yearly to arm peace from agricultural and industrial development.

To secure a nation prepares for war, the more energy and capital does it take from agriculture.

I regret that to discuss the question of tariff versus free trade is only tinkering at the question of the high cost of living. The nations must take their breadstuffs in hands. If the crisis in the high cost of living exists in France such a national organization as I suppose must be formed and France will blaze the world's way as usual.

Here it is vastly important to millions of peasant proprietors that the price of wheat remains normal and remunerative.

Here millions of working men have a vital interest that prices should be reasonable.

The republic, a democracy armed against all speculators, will arbitrate and regulate the market. Let it be well understood there must be no bureaucracy about the State's exercise of this new power. Delegates from the peasant producers and the workingmen consumers and the best qualified men of science will sit side by side with the nation's representatives and control the best of living.

They will not determine a stable and immutable price, but will stimulate technical progress by a series of measures to meet each situation.

MRS. MARKBREIT HONORED.

Widow of Cincinnati Mayor Wins Stage Laurels in Drama.

CARLSBAD, June 22.—Mrs. Bertha Plebach Markbreit, who has appeared on the New York stage, has been well received by the elite of Carlsbad. She is the widow of Colonel Leopold Markbreit, formerly Mayor of Cincinnati, who died three years ago.

Having bedecked herself in Paris and gladdened the hearts of the Rue de la Paix dressmakers, Mrs. Markbreit came here. She opened with the play "Tai-fun," in which the dialogue is brilliant and strongly emotional. Mrs. Markbreit takes the leading part. Herbert Bowers is abundance and loud applause be evidence, the widow's success is assured.

She will follow "Tai-fun" with "Baccarat," a three-act play by Henry Bernstein of Paris.

WALES COMES INTO VAST FORTUNE, BUT HE DOESN'T GET IT

Coming of Age Today, Prince Falls Heir to $2,500,00 and Parents Postpone Control.

KEEP IT BACK FOR A YEAR

British Heir Takes Parental Action with Ill Grace and Is Inclined to Be Rebellious.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, June 22.—A fortune of more than $2,500,000 accrues to Prince Edward of Wales tomorrow when he attains his eighteenth birthday and comes of legal age.

But it cannot be said that this great sum of money comes into the Prince's hands or under his direct control.

King George and Queen Mary, his father and mother, have determined to keep his fortune from his for another year at least, it is stated authoritatively by those in regal circles.

The Prince, who inclines to the opinion that he has been kept too much in the background, does not accept the parental authority with very good grace. He claims personal control of the fortune, of which the income, thanks to judicious handling, good investments and "rolling" leases, is growing a great deal. The Prince asserts that the fortune is absolutely his own and is entirely independent of crown revenue.

Wants to Be More in Evidence.

The heir-apparent is also protesting his right to participate in the functions at Buckingham Palace and in the other galleries of the London season. But the King and Queen steadfastly forbid this.

The Prince, who crossed from France yesterday to celebrate his birthday at Windsor Castle tomorrow, is to be hurried back to Paris on Tuesday to resume his duties at the house of his host and chaperone, the Marquise and Marquise de Breteuil, who was a thrower of New York. The Prince will not be permitted to spend any part of his income as he pleases or to take part in any English functions for a twelve month at least.

The King and Queen fear to expose him to the temptations which beset an heir to the British throne when he is given absolute freedom.

Young Edward's great fortune is the hereditary appanage of every Prince of Wales and is drawn from what is known as the Duchy of Cornwall estate, the Duke of Cornwall being one of the secondary titles of the Prince of Wales. This estate consists of lands and rights in Cornwall and Cornwall as well as valuable property in Kensington and South London, a district densely populated by working people.

Estate Carefully Handled.

The estate was not so valuable when King Edward was Prince of Wales, but hundreds of leases have expired since then and the entire income of the royal property have doubled many results. No money has been drawn from the estate during the Prince's minority and the income has been accumulating at compound interest for two years.

But the fine parents determination to keep him in retirement for a year or two new responsibilities would have fallen on the Prince. While this coming of age he would have appeared a great deal in public and acted often as his father's substitute in the thankless duty of opening institutions and laying foundation stones. He is entitled to represent King George at the investiture of Carnarvon and royal courts and to accompany his father on the opening of Parliament, acting at the King's right side.

Queen's Regency May Pass.

The Prince will supplant Queen Mary as potential Regent. That is to say, the question of the Regency act, passed last year, will be altered on the Prince's accession. It will be suspended so far as the present heir-apparent is concerned, but it will not be abrogated. It appoints Queen Mary regent in the event of King George's sons succeeding to the throne before he reaches the age of eighteen. Probably he will secure promotion in the army and navy certainly all the monarchs and rulers of Europe and the East will shower decorations on him.

The birthday cake which the Prince will cut at tomorrow's celebration was made by King George's chef at Buckingham Palace and has been taken to Windsor Castle. This triumph of the confectioner's art has been much admired by those privileged to view it. The cake stands four feet high and is very artistically decorated. It is crowned by the figure of a midshipman, marking the fondness for the heir-apparent in the "Sailor Prince." The only inscription on the cake is: "Many Happy Returns."

PROF. SMITH IN BERLIN.

Guest of Honor at Harvard Club Dinner.

BERLIN, June 22.—Professor Theobald Smith, Harvard exchange professor to the Berlin University, was the guest of honor at the dinner of the Harvard Club which took the form of a farewell to the professor, who completed his year in Berlin. Professor Smith, who represents the State Board of Health in Massachusetts, has been in particularly close touch with Prussia's public health authorities and made a deep impression in German scientific circles as a thoroughly able person.

PRINCESS A CLOSE BUYER.

Violates Royal Custom in Shopping by Always Asking Prices.

LONDON, June 22.—Princess Mary goes shopping nowadays, but hers are very quiet and inexpensive expeditions. She arrived in Bond street one morning in a one-horse brougham with her governess, and entered one or two shops.

The Princess inquired the price of each article before she purchased it—a custom which does not generally obtain among royalties, and once or twice turned to her governess and said: "I don't think mother would like me to spend so much on that."

HIGH GRADE MILK EASILY PRODUCED

CONSTANT CARE NEEDED

Large Outlay Being Unnecessary, Farmers Can Get Extra Profits.

By B. W. ELLIS.

MILK is one of our most perishable food products, and yet in many cases the attention which cleanliness receives in regard to milk production and handling is very slight. Unless milk is milked under proper conditions and properly cared for after being drawn from the cow, it sours and breaks down in a very short time.

Producers should consider that milk is used largely as a children's food, at a time of life when many have weak digestive organs that cannot overcome the ill effects on the stomach and system caused by bacteria, dirt and unwholesome chemical processes in milk. But doctors, boards of health and consumers in general realize this and demand cleaner milk produced under better sanitary conditions.

No Large Outlay Is Needed on the Farm.

To produce clean milk calls for no large outlay. A few small matters carefully attended to will do a great deal towards the end in view.

The barn should have plenty of light. About two square feet of lighting space per cow is necessary, and more when the structure is one that has dark corners, stalls or gangways. Light is a germ-killer. The barn should be large and roomy, with 800 or 1,000 cubic feet of air space to each cow.

The barn ought to be comparatively tight in Winter, but with ventilators so arranged that heat from the animals themselves will sustain a reasonable temperature, nevertheless, the foul air be carried off.

Walls and ceiling should be smooth and be kept free from dirt and cobwebs. Rich, fresh whitewash should be applied at least four times a year. Painting at intervals is good if the surfaces be frequently washed. Dirt is easily seen on a light surface. A glossy and washable surface is desirable.

The floors should be tight. The stalls should be so arranged that the cow, in lying down, does not soil herself with manure. For bedding, shavings have been found preferable to other material. They can be bought from local planing mills or from companies that now make a business of selling shavings for stable use. Some sort of good bedding certainly should be used to keep the cows clean. Clean cows, cleaner milk.

Milkers know how often the top of the milk in the pail looks, as if scum, or fine dusted pepper on it. This is caused by dislodging particles of dust and dirt and by loose hairs from the cows. Currying, brushing and even washing of the cows will largely remove this source of contamination. The udder and teats should be wipe off with a damp cloth before milking. Use of a small, shallow milking pail also aids in keeping dirt from falling into the pail.

A separate suit of overalls and jacket should be used in milking; these used in cleaning the cows and horses are full of dust and dirt.

Clean Stables and Clean Yards Are Necessary.

Removing manure from the stable daily or twice a day is almost indispensable. It should be placed where the odor cannot get back into the stable, as the odor comes from minute particles of the matter itself, which of course gets into the milk. The old filthy barnyard is no longer in fashion. The manure should go where the cows cannot wade through it, or come into close contact with it.

Feeding and watering troughs must be in good clean condition at all times. Only good, fresh feed and water should be used. There is disease for the cow and therefore for her milk in dirty or dilapidated troughs. Utensils should be of hard wood, well filled with solder. The solder prevents the accumulation of old milk and facilitates cleaning. Don't use a galvanized iron pail. It cannot be cleaned.

The proper cleaning of all milk utensils is imperative. They should first be rinsed in cold water, then washed with hot water and soda, powder, and scalded. Use steam instead of a cloth. With a cloth, stale milk cannot be kept from collecting in dents and seams. After washing, rinse again and scald with boiling water. Then place in a clean place, upside down, in order that dust shall not accumulate. It is not a good practice to place the utensils near a road. Dust and dirt of a very dirty sort blow into them.

The milkers should be clean, wear clean overalls and jacket and milk with the teats dry.

Milk takes odors very quickly. Do not let it stand back of the cows. It is well to have a milk room where the milk can be taken at once, weighed, strained and cooled. All milk should be cooled to as near 50 degrees Farenheit as possible before shipping or delivering.

On the whole, then, the production of clean milk means patience and constant attention rather than a "fancy" plant. An ordinary farm dairy in Hampshire County, Mass., handed first of eighty-four in competition. The demand for its milk increased so much that the owner was able to increase his price and yet he commands a larger market than he can supply.

CORKING CROPS OF GOOBERS

Going Back to Dixie, Where They Grow 17 Million Bushels.

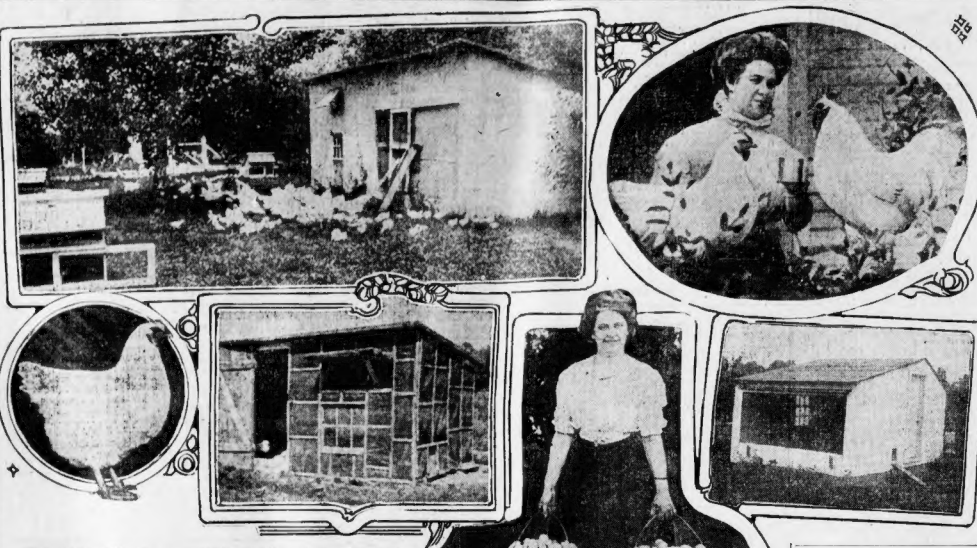
By the last census, there were 869,857 acres of land devoted to the growing of peanuts, against 516,654 acres, or 68.4 per cent. 218,908 farms reported the growing of peanuts, or 2.4 per cent. of the total number of farms in the United States. Only 133,914 farms were reported before forming 2.3 per cent. of the total.

There were produced in the United States 19,416,006 bushels of peanuts, against 11,964,000 bushels by the earlier census, the increase amounting to 7,452,969 bushels, or 62.3 per cent. The value of the peanuts produced was $18,273,000 against $7,271,000, a gain of $11,001,000, or 151.3 per cent.

Five States produce over 86 per cent. of the entire crop. In order of importance they are North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Florida and Alabama.

HOW TO WIN WITH POULTRY, EXPLAINED BY U. R. FISHEL

GIVEN the same amount invested, the same attention, the same business ability and the same place of operations, the poultry keeper will realize a larger return for his labor, expense and investment than can be realized in any other legitimate and respectable business. The work is not hard and it carries with it many pleasant features which make it still lighter. The poultryman's profits do not depend on the season, the weather, or the financial condition of the country.



These pictures illustrate a successful poultry plant, showing scenes on the farm and types of poultry house and poultry which are meeting the demands of modern conditions.

By U. R. FISHEL.

SEVERAL yearsbecause it is a profitable and pleasant ago, when I embarked in the poultry business, everyone claimed that anyone that went into the "chicken business" was weak-minded, as a failure was sure to be the result.

There is no need of any failures in the poultry business. Statistics show that ninety per cent. of people that go into the mercantile business make a failure. This cannot be said of the poultry business, and if everyone that goes into the poultry business will work and attend to business, they will make a success of the business.

Wherever you find a failure in the poultry business, trace it up, and you will find the cause to be either lack of business ability, laziness, drink, or the spending of ten thousand dollars for buildings and one hundred dollars for chickens, and expect the plant to pay.

Either of these four reasons are the cause for failure in the poultry business.

Good Stock Rather Than Fancy Buildings.

Take a man that buys several hundred dollars' worth of fowls and spends a few dollars in building, and you will find he is making a success of his poultry business right from tre start; but show me a man who has spent several thousand dollars in buildings, and when it comes to buying fowls, he buys about $20 worth, and I can show you a failure in the business.

Then hen is the money-maker, and you must have the chickens to make the poultry plant pay. Good buildings are all right, but if you spend $2,000 in buildings, and $3,000 in chickens, your plant will pay you from the start. There is no necessity for anyone making a failure of the poultry business if they stay clear of the pitfalls mentioned above.

The "back yard" poultryman has exactly as good an opportunity to breed fowls to the greatest possible perfection as has the man who rears them by the thousand. It is a well-known fact that some of our most successful exhibitors of poultry breed but a few fowls and keep these solely because of the pleasure they may get from them.

Any Part of the Country is the Place.

Poultry may be bred in any part of the country with perfect success.

This opens the industry to anyone anywhere who is seeking recreation combined with profit, for it is hardly possible to breed fowls of any kind without receiving some benefit from them in the way of profit, and he who selects from the best known strains of pure-bred fowls and breeds them carefully (as he will breed them if he seeks pleasure first) will surely find that they are a profitable investment.

The beauty of it all is that this work does not require extended space or large capital. It may be carried on during the idle hours of morning and evening in a space so limited that it could be used for no other useful purpose. The capital required is so small that any one may take up the work and carry it to a successful completion, and by this we mean that the breeding of poultry of high quality may be followed as successful in the back yard of a city lot as on the largest farm.

The only difference between the "back yard" poultry breeder and the most extensive poultry man in the country is simply one of degree. The one is likely to take up poultry breeding as a matter of pleasure alone, leaving the matter of profit as the merest incidental, while the other may breed poultry extensively a day before feeding. Larger birds can

Feeding Poultry to Get the Best Results.

Poultry foods and method of feeding is an important factor on any poultry plant, large or small. The one great aim is to feed food that will give you the best results and at same time save as much money as possible. There is no doubt but corn, wheat and oats in some form or other is the basis of most all poultry foods.

There are quite a few prepared foods on the market that are about as good as you can use if you have but a few fowls and do not live in the grain belt of this great country. Most all scratch foods are properly mixed and contain a variety of grain and seeds, together with meat scrap, bone and grit.

In feeding scratch grains already prepared, I would suggest that you give to each fowl a small handful of feed three times a day in Winter and twice a day in Summer. Dry mash has gained favor rapidly with poultry men in recent years, and the use of it for a short time on both old and young stock will soon convince one of its excellent qualities.

The feeding of young chicks is a very important thing on any poultry plant, for the success of the year's business depends on how many chicks you rear. We believe in hopper feeding young stock as we have found they grow faster if they can secure feed whenever they need it. We keep two hoppers in each colony house and several large hoppers placed at different points out in the fields so that the chicks can always have food convenient whenever they desire it.

Take the chick that grows up around the stable on the farm and they always make quicker growth and mature into better specimens. This is because they have a variety of grain and can get it whenever they desire it.

One of these hoppers is filled with mixed grain or scratch food. This feed is made up of cracked corn, wheat, kaffir corn, sorghum seed, millet, buckwheat, meat meal, rolled oats and hulled oats.

Fishel's Method of Making Scratch Feed.

To make up ten bushels or scratch feed, we use two bushels cracked corn, four and three quarters bushels wheat, one bushel hulled oats, one-fourth bushel sorghum seed, one-half bushel kaffir corn, one-half bushel buckwheat, one-fourth bushel meat meal, one-half bushel rolled oats, one-fourth bushel meat meal, one-half bushel rolled oats, one-fourth bushel millet.

This mixture makes one of the best grain foods we have ever used. If you wish grit added you can use one hundred pounds, but where growing chicks have plenty of range they need no grit in hoppers.

For scratch feed for grown or matured fowls, the above mixture is about as good as we can get with the addition of about four bushels whole oats.

The dry mash food is mixed the same for both old and young fowls and is before the birds at all times.

Our dry mash is made as follows: Two hundred pounds wheat bran, fifty pounds cornmeal, one hundred pounds shredded wheat waste, fifty pounds rolled oats, fifty pounds molasses alfalfa meat, ten pounds granulated charcoal, forty pounds meat meal. In this dry mash can be added, if desired, a pound package of any poultry tonic you desire to use.

During the Winter months we feed once or twice a week a wet mash, using a mixture of wheat bran, two parts; cornmeal, one part; alfalfa meal (scalded), one part; a little meat meal and charcoal, and you have a wet mash that will do the fowls a great deal of good.

During the late Summer and Fall months we feed both old and young stock quite a lot of soaked and sprouted oats, giving them all they will clean up at a feed.

Oats can be successfully sprouted by placing them in a sack, wetting thoroughly and laying out on ground in the sun until sprouted. The sack should be turned over twice a day and more water poured on some if the oats seem to dry out. In seven days' time they will be sprouted for use.

In feeding soaked oats we let them soak in the poultry business and seldom has any rick fowls.

Feeding Fowl in the Winter Season.

In feeding in Winter months when birds are housed up for weeks, I consider feeding three times a day the best plan. Feed scantingly, but keep your fowls busy scratching for the feed in the litter upon the floor of the house.

The water question is of as much importance as feed, and you should see to it that your fowls have fresh water at all times.

The question is often asked me how much to feed, and I wish to say that in feeding poultry no given amount to each fowl can be used on all fowls.

One yard one day may need double the amount of food it will need the next, no one must use his judgment after looking the flock over as to how much food they should have. On an average, a very small handful of food twice or three times a day is plenty for each bird. You who care for your poultry should be able as soon as you step among the flock to tell about how much feed they should have.

EDITOR'S ACRE

By Prof. Robert W. Neal
Massachusetts Agricultural College.

Help Hot From the Bat.

"I KICK" has been called our national motto. The Department of Agriculture has come in for its full share of our zealous kicking. Yet praise is as necessary to good administration as is protest, and the department has earned praise often.

An instance of the readiness of various bureaus of the department with timely help is found in the recent prompt action of the bureau of animal industry in spreading information for the extinction of the cattle tick in the flooded regions of the South. Could this information be carried into all parts of the submerged region and were it then acted on, the extermination of this fever-bearing parasite would be assured in all this territory—a large part of Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

That it will not be carried throughout the flood district, and that it will not be acted on adequately even where it comes, is no fault of the department. The department has done its share in having the practical information ready when it could be used, and in using all the means available for spreading it abroad.

Wheat and Oats.

SIX per cent. less Spring wheat was planted this year than last. Its condition is reported by the Department of Agriculture on June 1 as about 1 per cent. better than it was last year at the same time. The yield per acre is estimated at four bushels more than the amount actually harvested last year, and the total yield is estimated at 265,000,000 bushels against 191,000,000 actually harvested last year. Last year Spring wheat suffered serious injury between June 1, the usual time of estimating the crop, and harvest time.

Twelve per cent. less Winter wheat was planted this year than in the preceding year. Its condition is 6 per cent. poorer, the yield per acre is estimated as a little less than last year, and the total yield as 393,000,000 bushels against 430,000,000 bushels harvested last year. Scattering reports in the newspapers since June 1 indicate an improvement in the condition. The Department of Agriculture estimates a total yield of wheat, Winter and Spring, of 628,000,000 million bushels, or 7,000,000 bushels more than last year's crop.

Milk Ferment.

THAT there is uncertainty even about the facts involved in the milk situation was shown in a paragraph on the AMERICAN'S farm page last Sunday. Milk retails at a high price. The larger part of the milk producers insist that they cannot produce it without loss at the price they are being paid. Some parts of the public are insisting on conditions that the ordinary producer feels will add still more to his expenses, and some producers, with a special market paying higher prices or with other conditions in their favor, actually make a profit although producing more extensively than those who assert that production means steady loss.

That the complaining producer is not without some reason for his complaint, whatever else may be true about the matter, is clearly shown by such disclosures as these. An investigation of milk marketing in Chicago revealed that the farmer receives 2¾ cents a quart for milk that retails to the consumer at 8 cents. A strong milk dealers' association buys from the farmer and dispenses to the consumer. Of 4,000 dealers in Chicago, nearly all depend for their supply upon this one company.

Hens Paying the Way of an Enterprising New Hampshire Boy

John Bryant, a boy of No. 7 Tanner street, Portsmouth, N. H., has solved a problem which worries many a youngster. He keeps hens. Here is his story:

"I have sixteen hens, two of which are Brown Leghorns, four Plymouth Rocks, and the others mostly mixed breeds. None of my hens has a pedigree, but they lay eggs as you will soon see. I may say in passing that it is not necessary for my hens to have a pedigree since there are no roosters in my hennery. I think it is a good idea not to have a rooster with hens. When you have a rooster the hens lose so much time trying to please the rooster that they do not have time to lay, and instead of chasing around after a rooster they learn to look out for themselves and to vie with each other in seeing who can lay the most and the largest eggs.

Between January 1, 1912, and June 10, 1912, both dates inclusive, I have received 1,432 eggs from my sixteen hens. That makes a total of 121 dozen eggs in 162 days. I have realized $35.75 from the sale of these eggs, and the total expense for keeping my hens has amounted to $6.75, thus a saving of $32. It will thus be seen that I have received 24 cents a day from these hens at a cost of 4 cents, or a profit of 20 cents. I find a ready sale for my eggs and the hens are very little trouble to keep. I feed them green grass and young oats along with grain. All the hens are tame and are always glad to see me coming. I do not allow them to get outside of the little lot and house, as the neighbors have nothing to grumble about. I go to school every day and hope some day to have a much larger chicken ranch.

Young Bryant sends a diagram of an egg that weighed 2½ ounces and was 7¾ inches in circumference. "How is this for a fresh egg," he asks. "It was laid by a Brown Leghorn hen, too. That's pretty good for a Brown Leghorn, don't you think? Now while you are deciding what this freak egg looks like I am going to tell you something about my hens."

OPENING THE RURAL CHURCH.

Rural Mail Bag.

Some of our young people want to open our church-house for sociables and parties. They have worked up a good deal of talk about it, and some of the members side with them. Would it not be agreeable?

OLD STYLE.

How? Would it not be better for the young people to meet there where good behavior is almost inevitable, than to have no meeting place where everybody can come, and possibly to meet clandestinely in less desirable ways? Nobody thinks that family prayers are less sincere and effective because the family at one time enjoys itself in various admissible times and in the same room. Ordinarily it ought to be a very helpful thing for religious life in the community to have the church become the common meeting place for every one, and a centre for sound, healthy social life. In the middle ages, when religion was intense, the church was just such a meeting place. If the young folks find that their pastor and the older folks sympathize with their desire for natural amusements and recreation and association, they are all the more likely to sympathize in turn with the things these older persons are especially interested in. A great many sincere religious thinkers believe that the church can get hold again only in our day by coming into the closest touch with the everyday life of the people.

FOOD ELEMENTS IN OATS FORAGE

Rural Mail-Bag:

What is the best time to cut oats to be used for hay?

ROUGHAGE.

The time depends on the food element that is desired in the rougage. If the forage is desired for the nitrogen element, cut in the early milk stage. If a larger proportion of the carbohydrates is wanted, cut at the beginning of the "dough" stage. The milk stage is the one that is richest in protein. After the dough stage, the starch element increases rapidly, but the other elements decrease. Therefore, the answer depends on the element that is sought in making up the total ration. See Bulletin No. 163 of the North Carolina experiment station.

FLOWER SEEDS FOR THE FARMERS' STOCK

BIG CROPS ARE PRODUCED

The Crop Should Be Harvested Before It Has Fully Ripened.

Tame sunflower seed can be grown and fed profitably. The plant will grow on any land that will produce corn, and it is planted and cultivated in much the same manner, according to a writer in the Kansas Industrialist. The price for the seed averages about two cents a pound and the yield ranges from 400 to 2,000 pounds to the acre.

The best way to grow it is to plant it in rows, from six to twelve pounds to the acre, and cultivate shallow. The imported varieties makes the best yield under cultivation. Of these, the Black Giant and Mammoth Russian are the best. It is best to cut off all but three or four of the heads after they appear in order to give those remaining the best chance to develop.

Must Harvest the Seed Before It's Ripe.

The seed should be harvested before it is fully ripe to prevent it from shattering and damage by birds. Care should be exercised in caring for the seed. It should not be stored away in bulk until it is thoroughly dried, to prevent heating.

The seed usually is pounded out with a flail, but sometimes a disc arrangement is used. A disk is driven full of nails and revolved rapidly. The heads are held down among the nails and the seed is beaten out. This is rather a crude method and there is need for a better and cheaper means of removing the seed, which will lessen the cost of producing and increase the profits.

Seed Fattening When Mixed With Other Grain.

The seed, when ground and mixed with other grain, is considered fattening and palatable. In Russia the stem is ground up and fed to stock with good results. Oil cake, a by-product in the manufacture of sunflower oil, is very rich in protein and makes good food for stock. Sunflower seed also can be fed profitably to chickens during the moulting season. It seems to help the birds come into their feathers, and is considered very valuable for that purpose. It is best to feed it in a mixture with some other grain.

RECORD FOR PULLET.

Laying When She Was 18 Months and One Day Old.

By ROBERT C. BEAULIEU.

I have in my yard a ringlet barred Plymouth Rock pullet that was hatched February 2, 1912, and on Sunday, June 8, laid her first egg. She laid the eighth, ninth, tenth and eleventh, and on the twelfth laid a double yolk egg. Now, this pullet laid when she was eighteen weeks and one day old. The greatest record I have ever heard of in barred rocks was twenty-eight weeks and six days. I have every reason to believe she is not a freak, because her last egg is just as large as her mother's. I am incubating her eggs now, and if everything goes well, I expect I shall have created two generations of chickens in about twenty-two weeks. The eggs are due to hatch July 2. Anybody doubting my statement may visit my yard and see for themselves. I want to say, "Next."

The rule that says like the father to these expected chickens was hatched January 4, being twenty days older than the pullet.

KILL POULTRY PARASITES.

Plowing and Use of Lime Are Effective.

If the land is infested with poultry parasites there is no better method of disinfection than to plow deeply and dress it with lime. The parasites present are subjected to the combined action of the disinfectant lime and the direct action of the sun's rays. The application of kerosene and burning the parasites and scarfaces of the soil are said to yield satisfactory results in cases of parasitic land infection.

But any plan of disinfection employed for rendering poultry runs free from infectious poultry diseases is no stronger than its weakest point. If a poultryman thoroughly disinfects everything about the premises and then allows a sick bird to remain among the healthy ones he is simply leaving among the healthy flock a source of infection.

Revere Rivals Leading Resorts of World

"4,000,000 Playground of New England"

Revere Beach, one of the largest and most popular amusement resorts on the Atlantic seaboard, now known as the "Four Million Dollar Playground of New England," is already in the full flush of what residents and business interests predict will be the crowning success in its history.

Proprietors of amusement enterprises who have traversed the globe declare that Revere Beach with its natural geographical advantages, its mighty crescent of sand and surf, developed features and proximity to all residential sections in Greater Boston, ranks with the leading Summer resorts of the world.

But in spite of its present proportions and popularity the men who control the amusement enterprises there wish to bring greater scope and fame to the beach. With that end in view they have organized along the lines of a Chamber of Commerce.

"The Revere Beach Business Association" is the title of their organization, which is doing commendable work. C. L. Ridgway of the executive committee, who has just returned from an extensive tour, brings back the message that the possibilities of Revere Beach have not been attained by any means. There is a spirit of optimism abroad that foretells bigger achievements.

During the past Winter large sums have been expended improving the beach and adjacent attractions. Plans are already under way for a big carnival as a closing feature this Fall. The committee promise a spectacular program.

Secretary George Kuhn Rogers of the Metropolitan Park Commission reports that recent outlays have brought the total state expenditures at Revere Beach to $1,002,475.05, while amusement concerns have doled out another quarter-million on new features this year. This carries the total capital invested in amusements to more than $2,000,000, which with the State outlay warrants the title "Four Million Dollar Playground."

CLIP COUPONS AND HAVE A GAY OUTING

This is coupon-clipping Sunday!

It's another amusement bargain day. Therefore, don't forget to take advantage of the discount vouchers for five of the leading attractions at Revere Beach.

If some housewives see goods marked down five cents or even two cents they will promptly take a car and ride miles to buy.

How, then, can anybody afford to ignore the Sunday AMERICAN coupons, when they mean the actual saving of a quarter of a dollar?

The plain fact is that for every nickel invested in a Sunday AMERICAN, you not only get the biggest, brightest and brightest Sunday newspaper in New England, but the equivalent of five nickels as a present.

If you don't care for them, your children will, and, if you don't happen to have children of your own, give them to your neighbor's children. They are the biggest kind of a treat to the little ones now that the Summer vacation is on.

The coupons embrace just the proper variety. Everybody likes vaudeville and motion picture shows. You can't afford to miss the snappy bills this week at the Revere Theatre and the Theatre Comique, both of which are on the boulevard fanned by the sea breezes. See the latest reels and hear the latest vocal hits.

Take in Pattee's Original Diving Girls Show. See the thrilling high dives and the tank feats and rescues by a bevy of pretty aquatic experts. And you mustn't lose a chance to see "Genuine English Nobleman." Of course he's only a comedy disciple of nobility. "Lord Belgrue" is his name and he is a premiere in clowndom.

He has the loudest kind of checked trousers, furled half way to the knees, a laundered fence for a collar, and a cane and monocle, of course, and he thinks all the diving girls are crazy over him.

Clip the coupons and join your neighbors in a coupon carnival at Revere Beach tomorrow.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

Master Gabriel, the famous star of "Buster Brown," "Little Nemo in Slumberland," and other musical comedy successes, comes to B. F. Keith's Theatre this week in a new and original comedy entitled "Little Kick." For several years Master Gabriel has been appearing in vaudeville in "Little Tommy Tucker." "Little Kick" was written especially for him, and abounds in funny situations and novel bits of business.

Master Gabriel and Company will be but one feature of a remarkable Summer show, as practically every act on the bill is arranged for laughing purposes only. Cecil Henry, the comedian of Hilda Clark's "Models of the Jardin de Paris," has temporarily abandoned his famous "Now I'll Tell You" character, and entered vaudeville, assisted by May Francis. Another pair of funmakers will be J. Butler Haviland and Alice Thornton, late of the old Bowdoin Square Stock Company, in their novel comedy, "The Insurance Agent." Harriet Burt, the prima donna and former star of "The Time, The Place, and The Girl," will bring a number of new and exclusive songs; and another big comedy act will be Wentworth, Vesta & Teddy in her farce, "The Magpie and The Jay." There will be several other big features.

It's Surprising What a Few Years Here Will Do for an English Player

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

TEN minutes with Alice Lloyd on a hot, sultry night makes you forget the weather. Which makes Miss Lloyd something of a June triumph and a nice kind of a girl to have around at this season of the year.

It is astonishing what a few years on the American stage will do for an English comedienne. When we first came to know Miss Lloyd in vaudeville she was a reckless little entertainer, who dropped her H's all over the stage. We liked the deft way she had of spilling them.

Now that she has settled down into a regular American musical comedy star in "Little Miss Fix-It," with plenty of public endorsement to help her along, she is showing her English thrift by carefully going over the old ground and picking up the H's she once threw away.

For an English comedienne, Miss Lloyd is exceedingly American. They might not recognize her at home now. However, that matters but little, for Miss Lloyd has announced her determination to stick to the Stars and Stripes as long as the dividends keep in motion in the proper direction.

It was on that point that I received my first severe shock when talking to Miss Lloyd the other evening. She sat on a trunk graciously giving me the only chair in her dressing room. Taking things too much for granted I suggested that she was probably pining for dear old London.

My mistake. She was not.

"Oh I say chuck it" she answered taking a line right out of one of her songs. "What are you getting at? Of course I love London and anything within hearing of Bow Bells but I've got to like things over here so much better. And why shouldn't I? I suppose it is because I've been spoiled and I'm going to stick to the end even if you get tired of me."

Naturally I protested against the latter sentiment. Then she rambled on:

"When you hear any London music hall star declare she is yearning to get back to England, you can depend upon it that she is yearning more than she is earning. It's a sure sign she is a failure. None of us can come over here and get the reception you have accorded me, and still be anxious or even willing to rush back home. Those who wish to return at once are the failures. Why, we all receive more money here than we do in London, and don't you ever believe anyone who tells you differently. We are all crazy to come to the United States for the money there is in it. That's the plain, unvarnished truth.

"There are other reasons, too—splendid reasons. American theatrical management is much superior to the brand found in England. The entire business here is systematized and runs more smoothly than the slow-moving machine at home. An American star, under good management, has far less to worry about than those in England. Few of your stars need bother at all about the business end of their careers. Just as their money affairs are cared for by a big banking firm, so are their tours directed by a big management with detail down to the sharpest point.

"Your audiences are much better than any in which we play in London. In the first place, they are continually attentive and calm. There is no stir or undertone conversation as there is constantly in a London music hall. A player's every move is given the proper attention, and the audience is always receptive. Not the smallest piece of business is lost. Then, there's have no rowdy gallery as we have in London.

"And the gowns? Why, I always buy them in Florida and Canada where I will have everything I wear made here. The workmanship is far superior, and some of my costumes which have attracted the most favorable comment in London as English-made have, in reality, been made up for me here in America. Although much superior, they have been no more expensive."

Miss Lloyd hesitated. "Is that all?" I asked.

"Mercy, no," she exclaimed, but one must pause occasionally for breath." Then she resumed:

"The management of the stage of an American production during the performance is far better than that in force behind the scenes in any London theatre. There is more good discipline, with the result that the chorus girls are a behaved lot, and come generally from a better class. The American chorus girls have better voices, are better looking and can wear clothes with much more taste than an English girl."

"Oh, I say, I am tickled to death to stay here and hope I don't have to go back for months. I'm discovering America, and I'm not half through. It's too big to grasp all at once, but if the rest of it is as good as what I've seen, you couldn't chase me away. I do love America, and I love Boston and I——"

Passing from one English comedienne to another moves us toward Wish Wynne, who has just completed a week at B. F. Keith's Theatre—her first week in Boston, by the way. Miss Wynne is still decidedly English, a fact that does not produce an ill effect upon her work as a character comedienne. One can best describe her work at Keith's by comparing it to Chevalier's, which is more of character impersonation than of straight comedy. Miss Wynne told me that it was only when her voice failed her, and she was compelled to give up concert work, that she turned to music hall entertainment. Two tours of the American vaudeville theatres have established her with American audiences.

The child sector has won a victory in Louisiana. After a strenuous campaign, the Legislature of that State has passed a bill which permits the appearance of children in professional theatrical performances under certain conditions. A glance at the new law shows that it is a sensible measure, for it protects the child actor in every way—mentally, morally and physically. The efforts made in Massachusetts to remove the children of the stage from the harsh provisions of the factory law concerning the employment of minors has never been successful. In this State the child with dramatic sense is put in the same class with the unfortunate child toilers in dark, gloomy and dangerous factories. So far as the child is concerned in Massachusetts, the ill-fed factory child and the child-artist walk hand in hand.

The Meisteringers will be at B. F. Keith's on July 1. The success of this band of male singers last season has encouraged Mr. Keith to make more extensive preparations for the return engagement this year. For the benefit of those who do not know it, the Meisteringers are the combined voices of the Harvard, Schubert and Weber quartettes, each of which has a reputation for singing that is not confined to local limitations. In order to give this feature of the Keith bill something that looks like a production, a scene showing a camp at the Rangeley Lakes is being built. Out of this picture will come the songs.

SAYS BLONDES MAKE BETTER HELPMATES

Harriet Burt Declares They Are of More Even Disposition Than Brunettes.

"While type makes the best wives, the blonde girl or the brunette?"

Harriet Burt, the dainty little prima donna at B. F. Keith's Theatre this week, declares the blonde makes the better helpmate.

"The average blonde is of a more even disposition than her darker-haired sister," says Miss Burt. "While we frequently hear the expression, 'a giddy blonde,' the fact remains the blonde girl invariably possesses a greater supply of sound common sense than her more capricious dark-haired sister. On the other hand, it is really remarkable how many of the successful stars of our stage are brunettes, the blonde actress being an almost negligible quantity. I refer, of course, to the real blondes, not the self-made kind.

"With few exceptions, practically no blondes have attained success behind the footlights. Billie Burke, Lillian Russell and Mrs. Leslie Carter are the most prominent. On the other hand, the list of successful brunettes is almost endless. We have Maude Adams, Ethel Barrymore, Maxine Elliott, Mary Mannering, Blanche Bates, Eleanor Robson, Margaret Wycherly, Frances Starr, Julia Marlowe, Helen Ware, Margaret Anglin, Edith Wynne Matthison, Dorothy Donnelly, Gertrude Elliott, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Julie Opp, Grace van Studdiford, Blanche Ring, Laura Guerte, Flora Zabelle, Blanche Walsh, Bertha Kalich, Eugenie Blair, Clara Lipman, and, in fact, one might go on for an hour enumerating dark-haired beauties who have won distinction in the theatrical world.

"It is also worthy of distinction that most of the grand opera song-birds are of the most pronounced brunette type."

SUBSCRIBING FOR OPERA.

Many Are Now Making Their Reservation for Next Season.

During the past few weeks a very noticeable increase has been made in the subscription for seats for the coming season of grand opera at the Boston Opera House. The public has been quick to recognize the reduction in the price for season tickets, and many have procured their seat reservation by making a deposit at the box office before leaving for their summer vacations. The box office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 2 p. m., where seat plans can be seen and all information given.

Fishing Trips.

The steamer King Philip is making daily trips to the fishing grounds, where thousands of people are finding ideal hot weather recreation. The King Philip sails into deep water.

The trips of the steamer Satellite to the fishing grounds have been resumed. The sail down the harbor into the outer bay affords a splendid relief from the heat of the city.

Provincetown Trips.

There is no more popular trip out of Boston by water than that of the steamer Dorothy Bradford, which makes daily sailings for Provincetown. The Dorothy Bradford is one of the most modern of the harbor boats, and every convenience is supplied to insure the comfort of the passengers. The stay over at Provincetown is long enough to enable passengers to see the town and enjoy a Cape dinner.

PARKS, THEATRES AND EXCURSIONS

Castle Square Theatre.

"Charley's Aunt" is especially timely at this season of the year, and it promises to have an uproarious week at the Castle Square, beginning Monday evening. It is now two years since this farce has been seen in Boston, and it comes back again with Donald Meek in the leading role of Lord Fancourt Babberley. The burden of the fun-making will fall upon his shoulders, and whether to masculine garb or in the habiliments of the lady from Brazil, "where the nuts come from," he is certain to keep the audience in a continuous state of good humor.

Millions of people have already laughed over the humors of "Charley's Aunt," and it is a play that will have many more successful seasons. It is really a scream of mirth-making from beginning to end, and its humor comes both from characters and situations. In addition to Mr. Meek, the cast will include the favorites of Mr. Craig's company. Florence Shirley will return, and there will also be Thomas Meighan, Louise Langdon, Mabel Colcord and Al Roberts.

Majestic Theatre.

Charles Klein's play, "The Third Degree," will be seen at the Majestic Theatre this week. "The Third Degree" is one of those plays that will live long after the author and the original players are gone and forgotten. It is one of the most powerful dramatic efforts of the present generation, and at the same time a masterpiece of stagecraft.

The role of Lawyer Brewster will be in the hands of Howell Hansel, who, by the way, played with Mr. Bresse in stock. The part of Helen West will be played by Miss Rose Morrison. The victim who is forced to undergo the third degree by the police will be impersonated by Wyrley Birch.

Paragon Park.

With everything in full swing at Paragon, the average daily attendance is running far ahead of any previous Summer. This is specially noticed in the Palm Garden during the hours of the cabaret show, which runs from 9 to 11 o'clock each evening. Hardly a night passes that its entire capacity of 1,000 people at the tables is not severely taxed, with a line in waiting to take advantage of the next vacant table. The elaborate nature of the cabaret program leaves no second of the evening free from entertainment. In fact, it is a regular whirlwind of amusement. So many are engaged in the cabaret performance that it is easy enough to count the seventy-five people who figure in the program. The big feature this week is Mme Irma Blanch Wright-Heine, known as "the European Nightingale."

Globe Theatre.

The program for the week beginning tomorrow morning at the Globe will be of the usual attractive variety of high class vaudeville and motion pictures, headed by the Pathe Weekly. An event of local interest will be the appearance of Tommy Colton and Marguerite Miles in their novelty introducing the "Singing Dog." The Glidden Sisters, Hardy and Handy, Orve, the vaudeville violinist, and several other high class features will be seen.

Norumbega Park.

Norumbega will have its first musical comedy of the season the coming week in the open-air theatre every afternoon and evening, and, of course, it is one of Matt Ott's. All patrons of this resort in the past few seasons have reason to recall with pleasure the musical comedies conducted by Matt Ott. There have been many of them, but the coming one, the latest from his pen, entitled "Seven Hours in New York," is said to be his crowning achievement in this direction. Like all really successful farcical comedies with music, "Seven Hours in New York" depends upon absurd complications and rapid action.

Orpheum Theatre.

For the coming week the patrons of the Orpheum Theatre will be provided with an all-star vaudeville bill, headed by "Swat Milligan," a breezy, carefree baseball skit, which is booked here for the entire week. Among others to entertain are Morris and Beasely, a medley of singing, comedy and dancing; Major Doyle, the diminutive comedian; Mitchell and Lighton, comedians; De Onzo brothers, comedy acrobats and barrel jumpers; Edith Clifford, singing comedian; Gene and Arthur, sinking and talking skit; Conboy and Wilkes, comedy sketch, "The Claim Agent," and Morarto, double instrumental virtuoso.

Tremont Theatre.

At the Tremont Theatre tomorrow night Alice Lloyd will start upon the third week of her engagement in "Little Miss Fix-It." Both this artistic little English singer and her merry, musical play have been enthusiastically received by Boston theatregoers and the interest evinced during the first few performances has increased rather than diminished. Miss Lloyd's gay good humor, her exquisite sense of comedy and her inimitable songs form a combination of pleasing entertainment, admirably suited for Summer fare.

Park Theatre.

The Paul J. Rainey African hunt pictures open their seventh week at the Park Theatre this evening, offering ideal hot weather entertainment with the marvelous scenes of wild animal life and pictured stories of leopard and lion hunts. Indorsed by educators, sportsmen and the general public, they are enjoying prosperity, and bid fair to last out the Summer period with no interruption.

Bass Point.

It is refreshing to take the delightful harbor trip on the Bass Point and Nahant line. One is put in the right frame of mind for enjoying to the fullest extent the shore dinners and dinner specialties that are offered at the leading hotels at Bass Point and the great variety of amusements and entertainment that is provided on every hand at this popular shore resort.

The double boat service which is always inaugurated at about this time of the Summer is now in operation, and in addition to the general illness the line now has in operation the staunch and commodious steamer Martha's Vineyard. The regular daily double boat service began yesterday, and today the regular Sunday increased double boat service.

Villa Napoli.

The newest recreation place at Nantasket will be the Villa Napoli, which Alfred Di Pesa will open this week. The Villa Napoli is built on the old R. H. Stearns' estate, which contains thirteen acres of land overlooking the ocean. Mr. Di Pesa will make the place one of the most attractive on the coast. There will be free garage service, and, with other features, it will possess all of the comforts and delights of a private country club.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

The Big Girl Review, under the direction of Violet Mascotte, will continue with new songs and musical specialties at the Bowdoin Square Theatre this week. In the olio will be found, Fred Hildebrand, Mack and Vincent, and Tom Hefron.

Scenic Temple.

The heavy patronage at the Scenic Temple indicates that this amusement resort will not close its doors this Summer. Bookings have been made far into July. For next week several special attractions have been secured.

Hub Theatre.

The program of vaudeville and moving pictures at the Hub Theatre this week will contain several acts that are entirely new to Boston and the picture subjects will surely keep everyone interested.

Durbar Pictures.

"The Durbar in Kinemacolor" continues to delight large audiences at Tremont Temple, the explanatory chat of Henry Albert Jones and the special orchestral accompaniment lending interest and variety to the offering. As an added feature to the films showing all the events connected with the crowning of King George and Queen Mary of England as Emperor and Empress of India is a new reel called "The Birth of Flowers," which by a miraculous process shows the evolution of many flowers from tiny bud to full-grown blossom in as many moments as nature takes hours to accomplish the same result.
